State's Labor and Housing Market to Feel GI Impact

Graduating ex-GI students will exert their greatest impact on Oregon's labor and housing markets in the spring of 1950, as nearly half of all veterans now in college are sophomores.

This forecast, released today by Thomas M. Craig, veterans administration representative in this area, is based on a VA survey covering nine colleges in the state.

Accounting for nearly 80 per cent of Oregon's college enrollment under the GI bill, the nine schools reported a total of 11,780 veterans for fall term. Among these, class percentages were 204 for freshmen, 45.9 sophomores, 14.9 juniors, 14.1 seniors and 4.7 special or graduate students.

Nearly half of the undergraduates were expected to finish in June of 1950, provided they stick with their studies, the VA found. Seniors and juniors, those due to graduate this spring or in 1949, are about equal in number, but together represent less than one-third of all student veterans.

Freshmen are fewer than half the sophomores in numbers, despite an always heavy drop-out rate between first and second years. A sharp decline in veteran graduations after 1950 is in prospect. Next year's freshmen class of ex-GIs, it was predicted, is likely to be much smaller than this year's.

No assurance was given that the record sophomore class would escape heavy withdrawals, but most colleges reported that veterans are proving more determined than non-veterans. One state school forecasted that about two-thirds of its ex-GIs could be expected to graduate, including six out of seven present sophomores.

The nine reporting schools, in the order of their veteran rolls, were Oregon State college, University of Oregon, University of Portland, Vanport college, Pacific university, Willamette university, Linfield college, Reed college and Eastern Oregon college at LaGrande.

At the same time, a VA tally on length of entitlement remaining to enrolled ex-GIs disclosed that most students will be able to complete school with federally paid tuition and subsistence, but for a great many present sophomores it will be a tight squeeze.

Entitlement for 32 per cent of those now receiving GI educational benefits will have expired by the end of 1949, and nearly 80 per cent by the close of 1950, the report showed.

Driver License Renewal Speeded

Oregon's new driver's license renewal system continued to gain momentum last month as 39,990 motorists received current operator's permits. Secretary of State Earl T. Newberry has announced.

The revised procedure, begun last June, will take another year and a half to complete. After that time, all licenses will expire every other year on the birth date of the holder. Meanwhile, licenses are falling due for renewal in accordance with the "31" serial number printed on the face of each card. Schedules listing correct expiration dates are available at police stations, sheriff's offices, and from driver's license clerks and examiners.

Any driver's license numbered lower than 5R294001 will be invalid after January 31.

No individual notices are sent when licenses expire, Newberry stressed. "Each holder must obtain a schedule and apply for renewal at the proper time."

Examinations are not necessary for renewing valid "3R" permits, it was pointed out.
