Security Loan Drive Under Way in County

million are owned by Washington county individuals. War savings bonds in the hands of individuals furnished a cushion that prevented a serious economic setback after the war, the treasury representatives said.

Co-operation and participation in the campaign, it was held, will bring renewed belief in the country and its institutions and the unifying effect within the community is highly important if we get nothing else out of it. The value to the community of doing this security bond sales job successfully cannot be over emphasized, he said.

Chairman Christensen, in urging co-operation, said that the people of Washington county never failed their country in the bond campaigns during the war and could be expected to do their part now. Others speaking briefly and pledging co-operation were Art Vincent of Tigard; J. L. Searcy, Alf Johnson, James Say and Verne McKinney of Hillsboro; George Laver of Buxton; Henry Shelton and Hugh McGilvray of Forest Grove; Jay Gibson of Beaverton, and Don Hite of Sherwood. Searcy declared that the purchase of savings bonds in the security loan campaign was important to the winning of the peace.

How You Can Help The T.B. Patient

If some of your family has tuberculosis, probably you already realize that you have important responsibilities in helping him get well.

Complete bed rest—full-time relaxation of both his body and mind—is a major part of his treatment. The best place to get this type of rest is at the tuberculosis hospital or sanitarium where there are facilities and trained personnel to help him. But, unfortunately, the family and friends of a patient can hinder the patient's progress by a lack of intelligent cooperation.

To understand and so help the tuberculosis patient, it is well for you to know something about the illness. When tuberculosis germs enter the body, they frequently settle in the lungs. The resistance forces of the body may kill or wall off the germs. But if there are too many germs for the body to fight, or if the body's resistance has been weakened, the germs get the upper hand and active tuberculosis is the result.

When a tuberculosis patient is getting complete rest, his diseased lung has a chance to heal. The lungs are vitally involved in every sort of physical or mental effort. A patient resting in bed breathes

less deeply and less often than when he is up and about. Any exercise gives the lungs extra work. Deep breaths may tear the little walls that the body builds round the tuberculosis germs to keep them from spreading and doing additional harm.

His routine of complete rest, important as it is, may not be easy for the tuberculosis patient. Your cheerfulness, patience and encouragement will do much to help the patient. Realize that his rest must continue for as long as his health requires.

Since worry and emotional upsets are as harmful to the tuberculosis patient as physical exertion, he will never get well if he worries about his family or broods over his illness and his future. Certainly he should not be made to feel cut off from family life. But in your letters and during your visits, the interesting and amusing incidents of home life should be stressed, not the troublesome ones.

The patient may grow weary of rest in the hospital and want to get back to the home life. Point out to him that the doctor knows best when his treatment has progressed to the point where he may return to family life. Point out that regaining his health is well worth the months of treatment. Encourage him to make confident and sensible plans for the future, which plans have been thoroughly discussed with the hospital staff.
