Tule Lake Farms Offered Vets

Eighty-six farm units totaling 8283 acres of irrigable land in the Tule Lake division of the Klamath project are being offered as homesteads to World War II veterans with farm experience and other qualifications, the Oregon department of veterans' affairs notified County Service Officer Dolph Stuart.

Veterans must have two years of farm experience, the equivalent of $2000 in capital or farm equipment, character references, and must intend to farm as an occupation.

The Klamath project is located southeast of Klamath Falls on the Oregon-California border. The climate, according to the reclamation bureau's information, is semi-arid, offering an annual precipitation of about 10 inches.

Settlers will be assisted by the bureau and farm agencies in laying out farm fields and irrigation systems, leveling, developing domestic water supplies, crops and livestock production, and construction of farm buildings. Each settler also will receive, free, two barrack-type buildings and certain hand tools and furnishings.
