

Vet-Farmer Evans Gets Yen for Hens

By Gene Olson, News Editor

If Wayne Evans is operating a dairy farm on his six West Union acres, he's got some of the darnedest-looking cows you ever saw. They've got beaks and feathers and lay eggs.

But dairying was Evans' intention two years ago when he bought the place and entered the veterans' on-the-farm training class at Hillsboro. There were some chickens on the place and Evans figured he could put up with them while waiting for a permanent and a chance to buy a cow.

"But you know," Evans related, "it became easier and easier to get out and pick up those eggs."

Things progressed from that point in the present state of affairs which finds Evans with one cow and 2000 chickens. The barn which Evans once had visions of building to house a dairy plant is now in fact a hen house.

Evans transferred his allegiance from Nebraska and California to Oregon as a result of a hitch-hiking trip in 1935. He had been told "Oregon was the only place I found that was cold in July."

Evans worked for a while with the dairy herd at St. Mary's at Huber as it then purchased what he thought was going to be a dairy layout just off the Sunset highway.

He spent five and one-half years in the marines with service in the Marianas and Marshall islands. During two months he spent in a marine hospital, a bunkmate of his was Bill Veck, colorful owner of the Cleveland Indians but Evans didn't know it until too late.

At that time Veck was the owner of the Milwaukee Brewers in the American Association. He purchased the Indians after his discharge from the marines.

Friends of his used to point to Veck and say: "See that guy? He owns a baseball club." Evans thought it was the usually good-natured enlarging on the truth which was a favorite pastime in the service and didn't pump Veck for baseball information straight from the front office. To a sports fan, Evans' interest in it was a major loss. Because of that association with Veck, however, the Indians gained a supporter in Washington county.

Grant Scott, his veterans' program instructor, classes Evans with the "farmers who read." Not just newspapers, either. Evans is well-informed in many fields.

He doesn't like a certain Portland newspaper, though. "All I've found in it during the past year is the latest doings of our sweet mayor, our mean sheriff and what the people are saying about daylight saving time," Evans complains.

The Evans' have two children, two-year-old Patricia, and one-year-old Michael, who accept their father's conversion from dairyman to poultryman with a good deal of calm.

Not so calm, however, is instructor Scott, who rates the slim young Evans with the top students in his class.

Evans worked for a while with the dairy herd at St. Mary's at Huber as it then purchased what he thought was going to be a dairy layout just off the Sunset highway.

He spent five and one-half years in the marines with service in the Marianas and Marshall islands. During two months he spent in a marine hospital, a bunkmate of his was Bill Veck, colorful owner of the Cleveland Indians but Evans didn't know it until too late.

At that time Veck was the owner of the Milwaukee Brewers in the American Association. He purchased the Indians after his discharge from the marines.

Friends of his used to point to Veck and say: "See that guy? He owns a baseball club." Evans thought it was the usually good-natured enlarging on the truth which was a favorite pastime in the service and didn't pump Veck for baseball information straight from the front office. To a sports fan, Evans' interest in it was a major loss. Because of that association with Veck, however, the Indians gained a supporter in Washington county.

Grant Scott, his veterans' program instructor, classes Evans with the "farmers who read." Not just newspapers, either. Evans is well-informed in many fields.

He doesn't like a certain Portland newspaper, though. "All I've found in it during the past year is the latest doings of our sweet mayor, our mean sheriff and what the people are saying about daylight saving time," Evans complains.

The Evans' have two children, two-year-old Patricia, and one-year-old Michael, who accept their father's conversion from dairyman to poultryman with a good deal of calm.

Not so calm, however, is instructor Scott, who rates the slim young Evans with the top students in his class.

Evans worked for a while with the dairy herd at St. Mary's at Huber as it then purchased what he thought was going to be a dairy layout just off the Sunset highway.

He spent five and one-half years in the marines with service in the Marianas and Marshall islands. During two months he spent in a marine hospital, a bunkmate of his was Bill Veck, colorful owner of the Cleveland Indians but Evans didn't know it until too late.

At that time Veck was the owner of the Milwaukee Brewers in the American Association. He purchased the Indians after his discharge from the marines.

Friends of his used to point to Veck and say: "See that guy? He owns a baseball club." Evans thought it was the usually good-natured enlarging on the truth which was a favorite pastime in the service and didn't pump Veck for baseball information straight from the front office. To a sports fan, Evans' interest in it was a major loss. Because of that association with Veck, however, the Indians gained a supporter in Washington county.

Grant Scott, his veterans' program instructor, classes Evans with the "farmers who read." Not just newspapers, either. Evans is well-informed in many fields.

He doesn't like a certain Portland newspaper, though. "All I've found in it during the past year is the latest doings of our sweet mayor, our mean sheriff and what the people are saying about daylight saving time," Evans complains.

The Evans' have two children, two-year-old Patricia, and one-year-old Michael, who accept their father's conversion from dairyman to poultryman with a good deal of calm.

Not so calm, however, is instructor Scott, who rates the slim young Evans with the top students in his class.

Evans worked for a while with the dairy herd at St. Mary's at Huber as it then purchased what he thought was going to be a dairy layout just off the Sunset highway.

He spent five and one-half years in the marines with service in the Marianas and Marshall islands. During two months he spent in a marine hospital, a bunkmate of his was Bill Veck, colorful owner of the Cleveland Indians but Evans didn't know it until too late.

At that time Veck was the owner of the Milwaukee Brewers in the American Association. He purchased the Indians after his discharge from the marines.

Friends of his used to point to Veck and say: "See that guy? He owns a baseball club." Evans thought it was the usually good-natured enlarging on the truth which was a favorite pastime in the service and didn't pump Veck for baseball information straight from the front office. To a sports fan, Evans' interest in it was a major loss. Because of that association with Veck, however, the Indians gained a supporter in Washington county.

Grant Scott, his veterans' program instructor, classes Evans with the "farmers who read." Not just newspapers, either. Evans is well-informed in many fields.

He doesn't like a certain Portland newspaper, though. "All I've found in it during the past year is the latest doings of our sweet mayor, our mean sheriff and what the people are saying about daylight saving time," Evans complains.

The Evans' have two children, two-year-old Patricia, and one-year-old Michael, who accept their father's conversion from dairyman to poultryman with a good deal of calm.

Not so calm, however, is instructor Scott, who rates the slim young Evans with the top students in his class.

Evans worked for a while with the dairy herd at St. Mary's at Huber as it then purchased what he thought was going to be a dairy layout just off the Sunset highway.

He spent five and one-half years in the marines with service in the Marianas and Marshall islands. During two months he spent in a marine hospital, a bunkmate of his was Bill Veck, colorful owner of the Cleveland Indians but Evans didn't know it until too late.

At that time Veck was the owner of the Milwaukee Brewers in the American Association. He purchased the Indians after his discharge from the marines.

Friends of his used to point to Veck and say: "See that guy? He owns a baseball club." Evans thought it was the usually good-natured enlarging on the truth which was a favorite pastime in the service and didn't pump Veck for baseball information straight from the front office. To a sports fan, Evans' interest in it was a major loss. Because of that association with Veck, however, the Indians gained a supporter in Washington county.

WAYNE EVANS, STUDENT poultryman, is learning the business on his six acres in West Union and through the veterans' on-the-farm program. He's shown here holding one-year-old Michael while Mrs. Evans holds Patricia, the family's two-year-old.—Argus photo by Gene Olson informed in many fields. He doesn't like a certain Portland newspaper, though. "All I've found in it during the past year is the latest doings of our sweet mayor, our mean sheriff and what the people are saying about daylight saving time," Evans complains.

The Evans' have two children, two-year-old Patricia, and one-year-old Michael, who accept their father's conversion from dairyman to poultryman with a good deal of calm.

Not so calm, however, is instructor Scott, who rates the slim young Evans with the top students in his class.

Evans worked for a while with the dairy herd at St. Mary's at Huber as it then purchased what he thought was going to be a dairy layout just off the Sunset highway.

He spent five and one-half years in the marines with service in the Marianas and Marshall islands. During two months he spent in a marine hospital, a bunkmate of his was Bill Veck, colorful owner of the Cleveland Indians but Evans didn't know it until too late.

At that time Veck was the owner of the Milwaukee Brewers in the American Association. He purchased the Indians after his discharge from the marines.

Friends of his used to point to Veck and say: "See that guy? He owns a baseball club." Evans thought it was the usually good-natured enlarging on the truth which was a favorite pastime in the service and didn't pump Veck for baseball information straight from the front office. To a sports fan, Evans' interest in it was a major loss. Because of that association with Veck, however, the Indians gained a supporter in Washington county.

Grant Scott, his veterans' program instructor, classes Evans with the "farmers who read." Not just newspapers, either. Evans is well-informed in many fields.

He doesn't like a certain Portland newspaper, though. "All I've found in it during the past year is the latest doings of our sweet mayor, our mean sheriff and what the people are saying about daylight saving time," Evans complains.

The Evans' have two children, two-year-old Patricia, and one-year-old Michael, who accept their father's conversion from dairyman to poultryman with a good deal of calm.

Not so calm, however, is instructor Scott, who rates the slim young Evans with the top students in his class.

Evans worked for a while with the dairy herd at St. Mary's at Huber as it then purchased what he thought was going to be a dairy layout just off the Sunset highway.

He spent five and one-half years in the marines with service in the Marianas and Marshall islands. During two months he spent in a marine hospital, a bunkmate of his was Bill Veck, colorful owner of the Cleveland Indians but Evans didn't know it until too late.

At that time Veck was the owner of the Milwaukee Brewers in the American Association. He purchased the Indians after his discharge from the marines.

Friends of his used to point to Veck and say: "See that guy? He owns a baseball club." Evans thought it was the usually good-natured enlarging on the truth which was a favorite pastime in the service and didn't pump Veck for baseball information straight from the front office. To a sports fan, Evans' interest in it was a major loss. Because of that association with Veck, however, the Indians gained a supporter in Washington county.

Grant Scott, his veterans' program instructor, classes Evans with the "farmers who read." Not just newspapers, either. Evans is well-informed in many fields.

He doesn't like a certain Portland newspaper, though. "All I've found in it during the past year is the latest doings of our sweet mayor, our mean sheriff and what the people are saying about daylight saving time," Evans complains.

The Evans' have two children, two-year-old Patricia, and one-year-old Michael, who accept their father's conversion from dairyman to poultryman with a good deal of calm.

Not so calm, however, is instructor Scott, who rates the slim young Evans with the top students in his class.

Evans worked for a while with the dairy herd at St. Mary's at Huber as it then purchased what he thought was going to be a dairy layout just off the Sunset highway.

He spent five and one-half years in the marines with service in the Marianas and Marshall islands. During two months he spent in a marine hospital, a bunkmate of his was Bill Veck, colorful owner of the Cleveland Indians but Evans didn't know it until too late.

At that time Veck was the owner of the Milwaukee Brewers in the American Association. He purchased the Indians after his discharge from the marines.

Friends of his used to point to Veck and say: "See that guy? He owns a baseball club." Evans thought it was the usually good-natured enlarging on the truth which was a favorite pastime in the service and didn't pump Veck for baseball information straight from the front office. To a sports fan, Evans' interest in it was a major loss. Because of that association with Veck, however, the Indians gained a supporter in Washington county.

Grant Scott, his veterans' program instructor, classes Evans with the "farmers who read." Not just newspapers, either. Evans is well-informed in many fields.

27 Cattle: Custom Butchering Hogs Killed on Friday. Arrow Meat Co. Cornelius, Oregon. Phone Forest Grove 186J.

29 Poultry: 13 WEEKS N H pullets bought from Hughes Hatchery—Flamingo, out N 5th St to Jackson school, 1/2 mi E, 1 mi N No Saturday calls. 17p.

32 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

Washington County Agencies: FINISH YOURSELF: If you're handy this is the place for your Midn 3-rm house, just framed in. Ex substation, setting, 2 miles North, $2500.

33 Livestock: WANTED—Fox feed cattle and horses—Fred H. Adams, Rt. 3, Beaverton, Churchley road, Reedville, Call collect, Phone 3219. 12M.

33 Livestock: WANTED—Fox feed cattle and horses—Fred H. Adams, Rt. 3, Beaverton, Churchley road, Reedville, Call collect, Phone 3219. 12M.

33 Livestock: WANTED—Fox feed cattle and horses—Fred H. Adams, Rt. 3, Beaverton, Churchley road, Reedville, Call collect, Phone 3219. 12M.

33 Livestock: WANTED—Fox feed cattle and horses—Fred H. Adams, Rt. 3, Beaverton, Churchley road, Reedville, Call collect, Phone 3219. 12M.

33 Livestock: WANTED—Fox feed cattle and horses—Fred H. Adams, Rt. 3, Beaverton, Churchley road, Reedville, Call collect, Phone 3219. 12M.

33 Livestock: WANTED—Fox feed cattle and horses—Fred H. Adams, Rt. 3, Beaverton, Churchley road, Reedville, Call collect, Phone 3219. 12M.

33 Livestock: WANTED—Fox feed cattle and horses—Fred H. Adams, Rt. 3, Beaverton, Churchley road, Reedville, Call collect, Phone 3219. 12M.

33 Livestock: WANTED—Fox feed cattle and horses—Fred H. Adams, Rt. 3, Beaverton, Churchley road, Reedville, Call collect, Phone 3219. 12M.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

See Ben Faber Electric for Wade-Rain Irrigation. Over 78 farmers in Washington county now use Wade-Rain Irrigation. Ben-Hur Freezers 18 CUBIC FEET FOR ONLY $450. Peerless Pumps 1/2 h. p. complete $135. 3/4 h. p. complete $165. 1 h. p. complete $195.

Dead and Worthless Stock Picked Up Free. HILLSBORO RENDERING CO. 5521 Forest Grove 337J. Pets, Dogs, Cats, etc. 34. 2 PUPS, 7-wks-old, part Cocker for sale—433 E. Wash. 17M.

35 For Sale—Real Estate: 22 A joint Sunset Hwy, paved 2 sides, all cult and in crop. Large house, 4 1/2 bath, water system, dirt, good small barn, family fruit. Fine location $12,900.

Lime Spreading Dugdale & Sons, Inc. CORNELIUS, ORE. Phone F. G. 5401. AUCTION Livestock - Monday, 1 p. m. Automobiles - Monday, 8 p. m. Furniture - Friday, 8 p. m.