SATURDAY, JULY 3, 1869.

A Lover's Strategy.

A good story is related of a wealthy London banker, who is very good natured but inclined to be a little fast in his views of life.

The banker, on Sunday afternoon, when no body was expected, would occasionally ask the young man to visit his family at his suburban villa.

I have not mentioned that there was a beautiful young daughter of nineteen years, but that may be understood in any English family that have known wedded life long enough.

The youth, in spite of two or three days invitation to the banker's country seat to breathe fresh air and clear his lungs of London fog and smoke, was evidently very ill, and though he declared himself well and robust, the banker shook his head.

"I cannot make out what is the matter with my clerk," said the banker to a confidant who was in the back office with him, after the youth had brought in some papers.

"Well you are green, I should say, for a man of your time of life and experience," said banker number two.

"In love? bah! He is modesty and propriety itself."

"I tell you it is a fact, and with a rich old fellow's daughter, who would no more think of having him for a son-in-law than you would."

"Oh, the haughty old fool; my clerk is as good as his daughter, and he hangs on to him. Thank you for the hint."

As soon as banker No. 2 had disappeared, the young clerk was called in.

"So, sir, you are in love, and pining away for the object of your affections—that's the secret, is it? Why did you not tell me before?"

The youth was silent.

"Well, my boy, I pity you; but I give you a word of advice. If the daughter is fair, she is worth running a risk for. Look here; there are two hundred pounds, and two months leave of absence. Run away with the girl! Bah! don't look so stupid. I did the same before you, and it didn't hurt me."

The clerk fell upon his marrow-bones and was upon the eve of making a clean breast of it when the old man arose and left precipitately, to avoid a scene.

The young man considered, and acted, and the consequence was that the next day week there was no young lady at the dinner table of the banker at the country seat.

A note, however, was found on her dressing table conveying the customary prayer of forgiveness, and one enclosed from the young clerk, stating that, believing the banker had meant to give a hint in regard to his daughter, and was unable to give his public consent owing to appearances, he had acted on the suggestion, and ere his "father-in-law" had received the letter he would be his son-in-law.

The pill was bitter, and the joke a terrible one against him; but the banker was a good-natured man, and hated ridicule, so he took the bull by the horns at last, and openly declared that he was aware all the time who his clerk was going to run away with.

Says an Owyhee paper: A party of men coming from Elk to this place last week, got lost and struck too low down the Owyhee for the route they intended to travel, and while in a canyon near the place where Jordan was killed, they were avoided any contact with them and were not attacked, but their presence away from the forts is suspicious and they should be attended to by the military.

Trick of a Bride's Brother.

A New Orleans paper gives the following description of an amusing scene that transpired at a late fashionable wedding in that city.

The bride was pretty, as all newly-married ladies are, and the groom was the glass of fashion and the mould of form. A number of invited guests lent grace and beauty to the occasion, and hearty congratulations testified the good wishes of many friends for the happiness of the newly wedded pair.

"I beg pardon, madam; but you appear astonished," said the strange lady.

"I must confess I did not expect to see any one here," replied the bride.

"No, madam; I came in very privately, and wished an interview, subject to no interruption."

"It is very strange, ma'am, and I can't imagine why you wish to speak to me."

"The reason is simple. The man you have just married has imposed upon you. I am his wife!"

"Oh! impossible—you rave!" and the bride sunk into a chair almost fainting.

"My wife!" shouted the astonished husband; "why, she's insane."

"Is it possible, sir, that having perpetrated this great wickedness, you will have the hardihood to deny that I am your lawfully wedded wife?" she asked.

"Why, confound you, woman! I never saw you before in my life!" exclaimed the astonished man.

"Oh! Edward, I'm afraid it's true, and I loved you so! sobbed the young wife; "how could you have treated me so?"

"I tell you I haven't got any wife but you; this woman is an imposter."

The strange lady uttered a low, mocking laugh. The scene was getting interesting to the last degree.

"Come, John, that is very cleverly played, and it's time it was over," said, following the impulse of his arm, the stranger was pushed into the hall.

"John—who—what!" all exclaimed at once.

It was the bride's young brother; a wicked boy who had played a naughty, naughty prank, with the aid of his sister's traveling suit and her cast-off chignon and curls.

Good conduct at Sunday School seems to be differently rewarded in different localities. In a certain Episcopal Church at San Francisco, for instance, each scholar that is in his place before opening school receives a ticket for Punctuality.

A correspondent having, as was his habit, gone early to school one Sunday, observed a class of six or seven boys, aged from seven to twelve years, all of respectable parentage, throwing dice for who would win the whole lot of Punctuality tickets.

A medical student says he has never been able to discover the bone of contention, and desires to know whether it is not situated very near the jaw bone.

There is no doubt that paralysis of the right hand and arm is some times occasioned by the use of steel pens, especially by those who do a good deal of writing. The reason is only guessed at.

"Bones you have traveled a great deal, were you ever in Greece?" "No, Snow; but I fell into a thundering big tub of soap once."

"Why do you drive such a pitiful-looking carcass as that? Why don't you put a heavier coat of flesh on him, Pat?" "A heavier coat of flesh on him! By the powers, the poor creature can hardly carry what there is on him now."

A rowdy, intending to be witty, thus accosted a lady in the street: "Madam, can you inform me where I can see the elephant?" "No, but if I had a looking glass, I'd show you a very large monkey."

The rowdy sloped.
