These are important considerations for us to keep in view while wandering made choice of the stage, to the lasting benefit of the world generally. Popular applause is lavished upon public singers in a manner that scarcely any other woman can possibly enjoy. When Piccolomini sang in Italy they not only showered boquets upon her, but now and then a white glove fluttered to her feet. When Jenny Lind sang at Stockholm the rush for seats was so great that they were put up at auction and realized fabulous sums, all of- which went to a fund to establish a school there for decayed artistes. As a body there is ho one more charitable then musical artistes. When, in 1847, the Misson Pyne (then not so well known to fame) heard that a society for homeless children must fall to the ground for want of funds, they volunteered, unasked, to give a concert for its benefit, which was eminently successful.

Clara Novello's triumphs ought not to be forgotten. At Genoa her audience threw boquets containing valuable coronets at her feet, to say nothing of camelias worth twenty five guineas apiece, and then escorted her home with torches and flambeaux.

A greater triumph, however, has scarcely been achieved by any singer thap the unparalleled reception given to Patti of late in Russia. The sums which fortunate singers realize, too, is almost incredible. Everybody, doubtless, re-members Gabrielli's reply to Catharine II. of Russia, when she expressed her astonishment at her demanding eight thousand ducats for singing, "Why, I don't pay a field marshal as much as that !" " Well, then, get a field marsha to sing for you," was the reply. The Empress seems to have seen the force of insult, and a challenge was passed be-tween the two officers. They met-pistols at ten paces—and the Colonel fell. The anecdotes of her extravagance are endless. One will suffice.
