HELMBOLD'S FLUID EXTRACT BUCHU. For weakness arising from indigestion. The exhausted powers of Nature which are accompanied by so many alarming symptoms, among which will be found, Indigestion to Excretion, Loss of Memory, Wakefulness, Horror of Disease, or Forebodings of Evil, in the Universal Lassitude, Frustration, and inability to enter into the enjoyments of society.

HELMBOLD'S Fluid Extract of Buchu, Improved Rose Wash, will radically exterminate from the system diseases arising from habits of dissipation, at little expense, little or no change in diet, no inconvenience or exposure; completely superseding those unpleasant and dangerous remedies, Copalva and Mercury, in all these diseases.

HELMBOLD'S Fluid Extract Buchu. In all diseases of these organs, whether existing in male or female, from whatever cause originating, and no matter of how long standing, it is pleasant in taste and odor, "immediate" in action, and more strengthening than any of the preparations of Bark or Iron.

Mabel Moore's Stratagem. It was almost like that of Persian poetry, that little consistory at Baywater, in its glow and fragrance, and soft, delicious murmur of leaves. And Mabel Moore herself looked not unlike a Persian enchantress, as she stood there leaning one hand on a marble vase, with the gold of the meacis plumes hardly brighter than her hair, and a quiver in her heavy white lids that hid her deep blue eyes.

And Mabel Moore herself looked not unlike a Persian enchantress, as she stood there leaning one hand on a marble vase, with the gold of the meacis plumes hardly brighter than her hair, and a quiver in her heavy white lids that hid her deep blue eyes.

She was not alone, however, in the flowery fragrance of the twilight conservatory, the door-post, twisting and untwisting a long spray of jessamine with a sort of impetuous rapidity. He was a tall, manly fellow, with bright auburn hair, and a face that with her involuntarily compelled to respect and like.

"Mabel," he asked, almost passionately, "do you know that you are asking impossibilities?" "Am I?" "I cannot go to Australia without you."

"You can, Ernest, and you will!" "But, my darling, only think of it—a year's exile from you?" "Will it be any easier for me to endure, Ernest?" she asked, calmly.

"Sometimes I fancy, Mabel," he resumed, impetuously, "that you don't care for me, else you would never be so willing to let me go."

"Ernest!" "My dearest, I know I am unjust; but—" "Now," said Mabel, "let me understand just what you wish me to do in this matter."

"I want you to marry me the day after to-morrow, and to go out to Australia with me in the ship that sails on Saturday."

"A very reasonable wish," said Mabel, laughing. "But, Ernest, you know I will never marry you while your mother refuses her sanction and approbation to the match."

She only required the mustine, and one or two light wrappers." "Miss Mabel!" ejaculated the surprised lady's maid, holding up both hands in hopeless bewilderment; "where can you be going?"

"To seek my fate, Mildred," said Mabel, in a tone that was a curious intermixture of jest and earnest. "There—now leave me to myself!"

Mrs. Beckford, of Beckfordville Villa, at Richmond, was sitting alone in her comfortable parlor—musing on her far-off son, with a total abstraction from all outward sights and sounds—and when all of a sudden she looked up, a pretty young person, clad in quiet style, stood before her.

"What is it?" said Mrs. Beckford, somewhat curtly. "If you please, madam, I am anxious to come as a companion."

"Who sent you?" demanded the lady, surveying the large blue eyes and golden bands of smoothly-brushed hair rather distrustfully. "I learn from a lady of your acquaintance that you wished a companion, and I should like to take the situation."

"Hum-m-m," said the lady. "What's your name?" "Edith Moore."

"Moore—Moore? Got any relations in town—ah! at Baywater, I mean?" demanded the inquisitive, sharply. "No, ma'am I am alone in the world."

"I am glad of that," murmured Mrs. Beckford sotto voce. "I couldn't stand any one belonging to the guitar-playing girl who—but never mind that just now. What are your references?"

Edith Moore drew a letter from her traveling bag. "So Mrs. Carter, of Clapham, knows you, eh?" "Yes, ma'am."

THE ALBANY REGISTER.

Edith was standing where the brilliance of the lamp shone upon her blushing cheek and radiant hair, as mother and son entered the room together. Earnest stopped short, gazing at her in bewilderment.

"Mabel!" "Ernest, what do you mean?" exclaimed Mrs. Beckford, doubtful whether or not her son had taken leave of his senses. "This is Edith Moore."

"She is Mabel Moore, my own affianced wife!" said Ernest, springing forward, and sealing his words on lip, brow and cheek with half a dozen kisses, while the young lady, much to Mrs. Beckford's horror, made not the slightest resistance.

The next moment, however, she withdrew from his encircling arms, and glided to the astonished matron's side. "Dearest Mrs. Beckford," she said, softly, "I may tell you now what was just trembling on my lips when Ernest's footsteps interrupted me. My name is Edith, but it is Mabel too."

"I always wanted a daughter," she said; "but I couldn't bear the idea of Mabel Moore, the Baywater heiress."

"But you will love little Edith, who came to be your companion?" "I suppose I ought to scold you for deceiving me," said the old lady; "but I couldn't help loving you if I were to try ever so hard, and that's the truth of the matter. There, Ernest, take her, and I will ring and tell Thomas he may serve up dinner."

As though Ernest cared for anything less ethereal than Mabel just then! "You have conquered, dearest," he said, tenderly. "My brave-hearted darling, will the devotion of my whole life compensate you for all this faithful love?"

Mabel thought it would, and Mabel was right. A LUMP OF BROWN SUGAR.—Do you eat Brown sugar because it is cheaper? If you do, buy a microscope, and examine a lump of the next you take home.

OX HEELS FRIED.—Having boiled, cut the heels into pieces about two inches long and one inch wide, dip them into the yolk of a beaten egg, cover them with fine bread crumbs mixed with chopped parsley, cayenne, and a little pepper and salt; fry them in boiling fat, and arrange them neatly on a hot dish. Ox heels can be cooked the same as pig's feet in any of the pig's feet recipes.

BAKER'S ROLLS.—Put the flour into a pan, make a hollow in the center, and put in the salt, soda and yeast. Make it into a soft dough with some warm milk; work or knead it until it is smooth and shining, then cover it and set it in a warm place for two hours. Work it again very smooth, let it rise, and again knead and divide it in pieces twice the size of a hen's egg; roll it between your hands to the length of your finger; lay them so as to touch each other, on baking tins, brush them over with milk, and set them in a quick oven, for fifteen or twenty minutes, until they are a delicate brown. Break one open to see if it is done, and serve them hot for breakfast, broken open, as cutting them when hot soddens them. To make a roll in form of egg-shape, then not quite half lap it over, or cut round and lap over one-third.

LINIMENT FOR ANIMALS.—An excellent liniment for wounds, bruises, sprains and swellings may be made as follows: A pint of good vinegar, a pint of soft soap, a handful of salt, and a table-spoonful of saltpetre. Mix thoroughly and bottle for use. This is very efficacious, and is cheaply and easily prepared.

PIG'S FEET STEWED.—After they are boiled tender cut them up, put them into the teakettle boiler, with enough hot water to cover them, add an onion or two sliced at the bottom. Pepper, allspice, and salt to taste. Stew half an hour, turn off the gravy, thicken with flour and butter, add vinegar to taste, pour it back on the feet. Boil ten minutes, serve hot.

PICKLED PIG'S FEET.—Boil the feet until tender; while hot pick off the meat, season with pepper, salt, and vinegar to taste, put the meat in pans, press it down. When cold cut in slices, dip in meal, fry until slightly brown; to prevent it falling to pieces dip the slices in egg, or fry in flour batter.

OX HEEL SOUP.—Cut up the feet; if green (or uncooked), cut whole, as it will keep green for a year if kept in a dry, clean place, in a good, tight box. If bought at retail by it green, as you can see what you purchase, and are more likely to get the best article.

PIG'S FEET FRIED IN BUTTER.—Make a nice batter of an egg, table-spoonful of flour, a gill and a half of milk, and a pinch of salt. Split the feet in halves, and dip them into the batter. Fry them a nice brown, and serve.

PIG'S FEET FRICASEE.—Cut the feet in neat little pieces, and boil them in a little milk in the teakettle boiler with a small onion, a little lemon peel. Before you serve them, add a little butter, flour and salt.

POISONED WITH TOBACCO.—Mrs. Euella Gross has died in Maine from the excessive use of tobacco for one hundred and seven years; and to show the insidious nature of the poison, it is stated that she enjoyed apparently perfect health all the time her constitution was being undermined. This should serve as a warning to people who use the weed.

SEMIER'S CHAINS.—At a late bar-maid show in London, there was 38 competitors. Miss Summers, who had numbered one among the runners, was the first in the list of prizes, and became the fortunate winner of a purse of 20 sovereigns and a gold watch and chain.

A baker named Motzker was lately intoxicated at Indianapolis, and while in that condition some wretch painted his face with a sort of black paint that soap will not wash off, and he now looks like a fright.

It has always been a mystery to us where all the Smiths come from; but while visiting a neighboring city, the matter was satisfactorily explained by the appearance of a large sign over the door of a factory with the announcement that this was the "Smith Manufacturing Company."

At a wedding, it was formerly a custom to drink honey dissolved in water, for thirty days—a moon's age. Hence the origin of the honey-moon. An old bachelor adds as a reason for its being so called, because it was full of bells.

First old loafer.—The papers say there is a chance of the Bourbon die nastly reigning in France again.

Second do.—Bully! If there's anything I live for it is a high old rain of Bourbon. Let it pour.
