There is no proposition plainer to even the most casual observer than that the Democratic party is the same to all intents and purposes now that it has been at anytime during the past ten years. It has "gone back" on no resolution of its platform; it has not blotted out one word of its creed. It still holds to the old profession of faith. Great Britain contends that the channel of that treaty is Rosario Straits; the United States contends that it is the Canal de Haro—the two channels being separated by the Island of San Juan. This question having once been reported on by a mixed Commission, for a survey of the line, the United States is not content to refer it to another such Commission, nor has it been deemed convenient, even though such tribunal be appointed by a friendly sovereign power. Instead of this, it has been agreed to refer the matter to a friendly power. The Emperor of Germany has been selected for the purpose. The Government of the United States has in its hands much documentary evidence in support of its pretensions not beretofore made use of and on these grounds is confident that the better reason is on its side to assure to the United States the possession of the island of San Juan.

Such are the outlines of the provisions of the present treaty, and such are some of the considerations which have commended it to the approbation of the President.

And, we might with truth add, found its latest inspiration in the teaching and practices of Jeff. Davis, Breekinridge, Frank Blair, Tweed, Sweeney and John Morrissey. This same sheet, which mans to be oblivious to facts, though ever so plain, adds that "the domestic policy of the Democratic party recognizes and respects the rights of every class and section." This will be news, especially to darkish skins, who from sad experience know what sort of rights the Democratic party conceded to them in the day of their calamity.

A Paris letter says that when Paris was taken and the requisition made upon it, the bankers who went out to Versailles were met by the officials of the German Empire with sponges and water for counting bank notes. The amount havreceiving officers demanded the payment of half the sum in gold. They were told that there was not enough gold in Paris to meet the demand; but, having ascertained that there was bullion in the branches of the bank of France, they required the bankers to produce it. Three days was given for the purpose, and the gold was procured. Then the Germans charged and exacted three days' interest for the delay. "Anything more?" asked the French bankers. "Yes," was the reply, "you must pay the stamp for the bills on London."
