Subscribers finding an X after their names are informed that their subscription expires with that number, and they are invited to renew it. Terms--$5 per annum in advance; six months, $3; three months, $1.50.

Legal tenders received at par from subscribers in the Eastern States.

A Western editor was surrounded a few evenings since, and in the next issue of his paper complimented the serenade party on their "judicious musical taste in the selection of pieces." He was informed by a listener, after the publication that they had played the "Rogue's March."

INTemperance.--Grand Master Telfar of Colorado, calls the attention of the Grand Lodge, which makes it the "imperative duty of the subordinate Lodges to restrain, as far as possible, the Masonic crime of intemperance, by trial, and suspension or expulsion as the case may need."--Lutwick (Masonic)

It is said, that when the sun is going out of sight, the pious Swiss herdsman of the Alps takes his Alpine horn, and shouts loudly through it, "Praise ye the Lord!" Then a brother herdsman on some distant slope takes up the echo, "Praise ye the Lord!" Soon another still higher up the mountains, till hill-shouts to hill, and peak echoes to peak, the sublime anthem of praise to the Lord of all.

A VALUABLE THOUGHT.--Looking at the manifold and frightful evils that spring from drunkenness, we think we are justified in saying that it is the most dreadful of all the ills that afflict the country. We are convinced that if a statesman, who wished to do the utmost possible good to his country, were thoughtfully to enquire which of the topics of the day deserved the most intense force of his attention, the true reply which would be exacted by full deliberation--would be, that he should study the means by which this worst of plagues can be stayed.

HOW TO KNOW A GOOSE.--"Mother, mother!" cried a young rook returning hurriedly from its first flight, "I'm so frightened! I've seen such a sight!" "What sight, my son?" asked the rook. "O, white creatures, screaming and straining their necks, and holding their heads ever so high! See, mother, there they go!" "Geese, my son, merely geese," calmly replied the parent bird, looking over the common. "Through life, child, observe that when you meet any one who makes a great fuss about himself, and tries to lift his head higher than the rest of the world, you may set him down at once for a goose."

ROCKY MOUNTAIN SCIENTIFIC INVESTIGATIONS.--Prof. Marsh of Yale College, and party, who left San Francisco on Saturday last for New York, have been traveling since June, collecting and investigating the vertebrate fossils of the Rocky Mountain region; he has made one of the finest collections in the world. His explorations among the upper cretaceous formations of Kansas have been very remarkable. It is said that his investigations will furnish the material for clearing up quite a number of geological puzzles, particularly the relations of the ancient fresh water lake basins East and West of the Rocky Mountains. It has been found that the plover basin in Oregon contains a very large number of fossil horses, and the minute vertebrates from the tertiary formation of Wyoming are considered of great value. Professor Marsh has recently appeared before the California Academy of Sciences and read some interesting papers.

COLUMBUS RESPONSIBLE.--Our old friend Columbus--whom many of our readers will remember as the man who discovered America--has had many hard things said of him, but the harshest is from a Hartford paper. It says, in its efforts to prove that the discovery of this continent was not good; "The Indians never thanked Columbus, for one party. The Africans had small ground to be grateful for the market he opened for them. He led Spain into a dance of great expectations, which ended in a glorious ruin. He introduced tobacco into Europe, and laid the foundation for more tracts and nervous diseases than the Romans had in a thousand years. He introduced the potato into Ireland, indirectly, and that caused such a rapid increase of population that the great famine was the result, and an enormous emigration to New York--hence Tweed and Hall, and the constituency of the ring. Columbus is really responsible for New York."

THE VOTE IN ENGLAND.--On three separate occasions within the past few years the House of Commons of England have been brought to a direct vote on an important question concerning the liquor traffic. Namely: as to whether the people of the several parishes and towns shall have the power to decree the suppression of the traffic within their limits, when a vote of two-thirds of the rate payers shall be secured for such a measure. When in 1864, the House first voted on the bill, introduced by Sir Wilfrid Lawson, to refer the question directly to the people, the vote for the second reading of the bill, which is really the test question in that body with reference to any new measure, was exceedingly small--only 40 against 207. Majority against the bill, 207.

In the session for 1869, the measure was again brought before the House by its friends, and after a most earnest and able discussion of the subject, the majority against the measure was reduced to 100.

The question recently came before the Commons in its session for 1870, and after an animated but courteous discussion, the majority against the second reading was reduced to thirty-one! When the vote was announced, an involuntary cheer was given by the friends of the bill, who saw in that vote, not only a promise of ultimate triumph, but an assurance that they had sustained their last defence.

J. S. MENDENHALL, Agent, Albany, Oregon, 1874.

Albany Register.

In Boston, many years ago, there lived (as they do now, we venture to say), two young fellows, rather waggish in their ways, and who were in the habit of patronizing rather extensively a tailor by the name of Smith. Well, one day into the shop these two young bloods strolled. Says one of them:

"Smith, we've been making a bet. Now we want you to make each of us a suit of clothes; wait till the bet is decided, and the one that loses will have to pay the whole." "Certainly, gentlemen; I shall be most happy to serve you," says Smith, and forthwith their measures were taken, and in due course of time the clothes were sent home. A month or two passed by, and yet our friend, the tailor, saw nothing of his customers. One day, however, he met them, and thinking it was almost time the bet was decided, he made up to them and asked them how their clothes fitted.

"Oh! excellently," says one; "by the by, Smith, our bet isn't decided yet." "Ah!" says Smith, "what is it?" "Why, I bet that when Bunker Hill Monument falls, it will fall toward the South! Bill here, took me up, and when the bet is decided we'll call and pay you that little bill." Smith's face stretched to double its usual length, but he soon recovered his wonted good humor.

The Traveler in the Snow.

A traveler was crossing a mountain hill alone, over almost unbroken snow. Warning had been given him that if slumber pressed down his weary eyelids, they would inevitably be sealed in death. For a time he went bravely along his dreary path; but with the deepening shade and freezing blast at night there fell a weight upon his brain and eyes which seemed to be irresistible. In vain he tried to reason with himself, in vain he strained his utmost energies to shake off that fatal heaviness. At this crisis of his fate his foot struck against a heap that lay across his path. No stone was that, although no stone could be colder or more lifeless. He stopped to touch it, and found a human body, half buried beneath a fresh drift of snow. The next moment the traveler had taken a brother in his arms, and was chafing his hands, and chest, and brow; breathing upon the stiff, cold lips the warm breath of a living soul; pressing the silent heart to the beating pulse of his own generous bosom.

The effort to save another had brought back to himself life, and warmth, and energy. He was a man again, instead of a weak creature, succumbing to despairing helplessness--drooping down in dreamless sleep to die. "He saved a brother, and was saved himself."--English Hearts and English Hands.

GEORGE H.--George the Second laid great stress on the minutest trifles, insisting on wearing his shirts in the order in which they were numbered and flying into a violent passion if they brought him the wrong number. "Why am I to wear No. 10, when I have not had No. 15? Why am I to do nothing that I like? Am I king of England or am I not? That I want to know." And then he would fall to kicking his hat about the room, to vent his anger, and rating any of the ministers that came in, in his outlandish jargon. Once he was going to kick the Duke of Argyle, who laid his hand upon his sword, and withdrew in high dudgeon. Meeting Sir Robert Walpole on the stair-case, he complained of what had happened, to which the other replied, "O! that's nothing, he has treated me so a hundred times."

They who throw stones at what is above them, receive the missile back again by the law of gravity; and lucky are they, if they bruise not their own face.

A strong mind is sometimes more easily impressed than a weak one. For example, you cannot so easily convince a fool that you are a philosopher as that you are a fool.
