A MATTER FOR STUDY.—The New York Tribune gets off this:

There is a way of putting things which it isn't easy to get over. The Boston Under-escort the Governor of the State to hear the election-errand, and afterwards at the expense of the State, partook of a supper at Parker's Hotel, with the most illegal accompaniments of champagne and hot punch—the fast costing ten dollars a plate. "Now," says a newspaper critic on this matter, "if John Smith gets up a one dollar supper, including hot whiskey, for his friends, he is seized, fined and imprisoned." To a reform like this there is simply no rejoinder. What right has the Commonwealth of Massachusetts not merely to wink at a violation of any statute, but even to instigate it? Is such miserable inconsistency as this which keeps the whole matter of Prohibition at the mercy of temporary legislation, and leaves men to doubt the sincerity of its professed advocates. If the State purchases alcohol against the law of her own making, how can she fail to render doubtful her mode for making it?

The Hon. Walker Brooke, of Miss., had an inexhaustible fund of dry humor, which never deserted him even in the most trying exigency. During the Clay and Polk campaign, his admiration for the great Kentuckian, led him to bet a pair of match boxes, all the stock he had, on the result; and this, though a strict member of the Presbyterian church. Of course he was "churched" for gaming. "All we ask of you, Mr. Brooke," said the minister, during the trial, "is to acknowledge that you are sorry, and promise to sin no more." "Sorry?" asked Mr. Brooke, rising from his seat with an air of injured innocence. "Sorry? My dear brother, when I think of those beautiful boys, gone from my gaze forever, I can truly say, with hand upon my heart, that no transaction of my life gives me more genuine sorrow than this!"

Willie had a pair of boots sent him on his fourth birthday—a pair of little red-topped boots. They were received with shouts of intense delight, the strongest desire of his childish heart having been for such a pair of boots.

But alas! small as were his feet, the boots were smaller. They would, by no manner of tugging, be made to go on. Again and again, till long past his bedtime, the child made the trial, when father mother and Bridget had failed; till at last, utterly wearied, he was undressed, still hugging the boots.

Then a thought seemed to strike him. Dropping on his knees, he repeated his evening prayer, and said, "Now I lay me," and then adding very earnestly, "And please God, make my boots go on easy in the morning," he went cheerfully to bed, boots and all.

The trusting faith of the child touched the father's heart, and though very tired, he sallied out, going from one store to another, till he found another pair of little red-topped boots that went on "easy in the morning."

At breakfast one morning, in that quiet and comfortable old inn, the White Swan, in York, England, a forger made a quick dispatch with the eggs. Throwing his spoon into the middle, he drew out the yolk, devoured it, and passed on to the next. When he got to his seventh egg, an old farmer, who had been already prejudiced against his mustachios, could brook the extravagance no longer, and speaking up, said: "Why, sir, you leave all the white! How is Mrs. Kockwood to afford to provide breakfast at that rate?" "Vy," replied the outside barbarian, "you wouldn't have me to eat de white? In de yolk is de shicken; de yolk de felders. Am I to make von bolster of my belly?" The farmer was dumfounded.

A young lady in a neighboring town has taken up dentistry for a living. All the gentlemen patronize her. When she puts her arm around the neck of a patient, and caresses his sensation is about as nice as they make 'em. One young man has become hopelessly infatuated with her. Consequently he hasn't a tooth in his head. She has pulled every blessed one of them; and made him two new sets and pulled them. She is now at work on his father's saw. He holds the saw.

Boston's farewell bouquet to Nelson was a ship four feet long, resting on an ocean of red plinks, with the word "Adieu" on one side and "Cuba" on the other, in white plinks. It sailed down the middle aisle of the theater in the middle of a flue passage in "Martha," and was launched upon the stage after considerable exertion, where it rested quietly until the curtain fell, and was then steered by the prima donna herself to some unknown haven behind the scenes.

A doctor was called in to see the patient, whose native land was Ireland, and whose native drink was whisky. Water was prescribed as the only cure. Pat said it was out of the question, he could never drink it. Then milk was proposed, and Pat agreed to get well on milk. The doctor was summoned again. Near the bed on which the sick man lay was a table, and on the table a large bowl of milk, but strongly flavored with whisky. "What have you there?" said the doctor. "Milk, doctor, just what you ordered." "But there's whisky in it; I smell it." "Well, doctor," sighed the patient, "there may be whisky in it, but milk is my object."

"My friend, don't you know that it is very dangerous to take a nap while the train is in motion?" "Why, no," exclaimed the astonished individual, waking up; "why so?" "Because this train runs over sleepers."
