

FOR PRESIDENT, U. S. GRANT.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT, HENRY WILSON.

Presidential Electors, A. B. MEACHAM, of Umatilla county. W. D. HARE, of Washington county. J. F. GAZLEY, of Douglas county.

Will Remember.

Greeley has said a great deal at different times in favor of General Grant. He said at one time that the people of the United States "do not know the slanderers of General Grant and do not care to know them."

Double Barreled.

The Liberal organs find it "exceedingly difficult and pretty impossible" to keep both wings of the party in working condition, since the two require such widely different food.

"This kind of talk won't win many votes. The party that puts nearly all the cash in a concern, has a right to a proportionate share of the dividends"

"BRICK" POMEROY'S DISCRETION.

A correspondent of the Boston Globe, writing from the Indian Territory, tells this good story of "Brick" Pomero-y: "Brick" Pomero-y recently made a grand tour through the West, and it was originally part of his plan to make a "raid" on the Indian Territory and write it up for his paper, the Democrat.

The logical feebleness of science is not sufficiently borne in mind. It keeps down the weed of superstition, not by logic, but by slowly rendering the mental soil unfit for its cultivation.

Vesuvius in Eruption—How the Lava Flows.

The following gives a very graphic description of the last great eruption of Vesuvius:

As we advanced the roaring of the mountain began to be heard above the noise of the crowd of carriages, and now the stream of fugitives from all the villages round the mountain met us. The panic was indescribable, the horrid bel-lowing having demoralized the population more than anything else; for never in the memory of living man, had it ever been heard before, and who could say what it might portend?

Just at the foot of the mountain, separated once by a valley, stood the villages of Massa and Sauto Sebastiano; in 1855 a lava stream flowed between them, and left a mountain where once the valley was. I now found the lava coming down the same track and already in an incredible short space of time it had reached within gunshot of the villages, menacing both. There it was, the fiery stream oozing along like molten metal laden with scoria, that fell over and over as it rolled more than house-high along, with deadly, irresistible might. It reached a tree, the tree burst into flames: it touched a house, a heap of smoking ruins was all that remained, to disappear into the great black, heaving, smoking sea of destruction. A deep quarry lay in its way; it slowly approached the edge, the people paused in awe, and a great shout went up as the first fiery wave heaved over and plunged below; a cataract of molten fire and great glowing rocks poured in for a few moments, and the quarry was filled, and the mighty mass rolled undiminished on.

Meanwhile, in both villages all was confusion; all the carts that could be got stood in the streets, and all the wretched peasants' household goods were hurriedly piled on them, and as hurriedly driven away, for soon the lava will have cut the road. Some had already fled and their houses were shut; others were wildly flinging everything into the street, to be ready with their turn at the carts; others, having made bundles of their best, were carrying them off on their heads—fathers, mothers and little ones fleeing together; and over the shouting of the men and the weeping of the women, and the calling to each other, and the voices of the drivers as they urged on their horses, came ever and incessantly the thundering roar of the mountain. And now the road is cut, and the carts have to take by-paths, soon also to be intercepted; and then the police pushed back the crowd, and the lava is at the houses, and first one falls, and then another. But what is that shout and rush? The lava has reached a house where on the terrace appears a woman screaming for help. She wanted to rescue yet another bundle, and her retreat is cut off; the lava is rising against the walls, and soon all will be a ruin, and she wrings her hands wildly, and a shout is raised, "A ladder, a ladder!" and the crowd fall back, and the police hurry on, a few brave fellows carrying one between them; it is placed against the tottering house, a brave man (he is a common soldier) rushes up and brings down the almost senseless woman; not a moment too soon, for with a rumble the house falls, and the lava occupies its place. But see! it advances no further; it has turned, it passes on down to the plain, to new destruction, but the rest of the village is saved. This lava stream ran between four and five miles in the twenty-four hours, or about one hundred yards an hour.

The mountain was, at this time, a sublime and wonderful spectacle; half shrouded in the smoke that rose from all its sides, it seemed of more than usual height; a great stream of glowing lava descended on the left, and plunging down a precipice in waves of liquid fire, could be traced far out into the plain, its dull red glare lightened at intervals by the more yellow flame of burning houses; a similar stream on the right traced the curves of the mountain in that direction, while at the base the great stream that menaced Sauto Jorio and all the plain below could be traced in its majestic breadth; other minor streams of fire furrowed the mountain in different directions; while above, the majestic pile of vapor was divided by the ever renewed column of flame and incandescent stones, which, after shooting to unknown heights, might be seen falling in showers of brilliant sparks and rolling down the mountain side.

The logical feebleness of science is not sufficiently borne in mind. It keeps down the weed of superstition, not by logic, but by slowly rendering the mental soil unfit for its cultivation.

A well-to-do farmer in Penbody, Mass., had a daughter die of consumption recently, and to save expense dug the grave himself; and, and after the funeral service at the house, placed his hoe and shovel in the hearse, and when the coffin was deposited, took his tools and filled the grave.
