

Republican Ticket for 1872

FOR PRESIDENT.

U. S. GRANT.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT.

HENRY WILSON.

Presidential Electors, A. B. MEACHAM, of Clatsop county. W. D. HARE, of Washington county. J. F. GAZLEY, of Douglas county.

Diabolical Squirrels.

One by one the old-time principles and usages, the ancient landmarks and traditions of the Democracy have been eschewed and swept away, until to-day nothing remains of its ancient prestige and glory, save the name. The repeal of the Nebraska bill may properly be regarded as the event which sounded the death knell of the Democratic party. From that time to this the work of disintegration has been slowly but surely going on. Within the last few years the many "departures taken," and the numerous unscrupulous schemes for power and pelf recklessly taken by the Democracy have given strong indication of its speedy demise. It remained for renegade Republicans, bankrupt in reputation and influence in the party which their perfidy failed to corrupt, and which drove them from its ranks, to absorb the little remaining vitality that circulated sluggishly through Democratic veins. By so doing it seems to have reached that climax of horrors which Pomeroy said some time ago it was on the road to. Brick asseverated that it was on the road to the devil. In a figurative sense his sulphurous majesty has been reached by the Democracy. The flames of their torment have begun to wax with more than their wonted hotness. Pomeroy seems to have read the characters of Greeley and Brown and the rest of the diabolical "sore-head" Republican imps, well. He knew that "Old White Hat's" vagaries and whims, if indorsed and faithfully followed, would lead the Democracy such a dance of inconsistency as would be utterly diabolical. It is true the party had arrived at great proficiency in making new and startling changes. Its feats of high and lofty tumbling in the political arena were never equalled, much less surpassed. These changes, however, were always made with some show, however feeble, of individual consistency. They were very unscrupulous and reckless in their shiftings, but they were made generally with reference to the overthrow of Republican principles. It is not so now. They yield their individuality into the hands of a faction of their old time, and bitterest enemies. The strange picture is presented of the great Democratic snake being entirely eaten up and incorporated into the flesh and blood, willingly too, of a little wriggling, selfish, disaffected Republican worm. Greeley, Brown, Trumbull, Sumner, Schurz, men who have done so much to destroy the Democratic party whom the Democracy so recently held up to scorn and execration; who are as much opposed to Democratic principles and policy to-day as in the day when Brooks' cane fell in vigorous blows of chastisement on the head of Sumner; these are the men who now own the Democracy, body and soul, and whom they intend wielding for the promotion of their selfish purposes. We have been trying to think of a name that would be appropriate for this new coalition. The name Democrat is no longer appropriate, neither will Liberals do. Let them be called Diabolical Squirrels; for they do twist and wriggle in their agony most devilishly.

A compass has four points, that's certain; but a pair of compasses has only two.

The Nomination of Greeley and Brown by the Baltimore Convention.

We were not at all surprised to hear on our return of the endorsement of Greeley and Brown by the Baltimore Convention. The indications were so clearly and unmistakably in that direction as to leave but little room for doubt as to the result. The scheme, projected by the Missouri Republican, at first received so unfavorably by many, gradually gained in influence and power until its acceptance or incorporation into Democratic identity became only a matter of form. The South were among the earliest and most emphatic endorsers. They threw themselves into the arms of the movement with an abandon anything but prudent. The West and East, after more or less hesitation, suddenly broke out with the infection, and for the past month or so a wonderful hurry-scurry of endorsement has been the prevailing symptom. When it is remembered that in endorsing Greeley and Brown the Democracy were compelled to surrender the principles which have for so long a time constituted their individuality, some comprehension of the sacrifice made by them may be arrived at. In this movement they have yielded their most cherished and time-honored principles. They have planted themselves upon a Republican platform, taken into their mouths Republican arguments, have clasped to their bosoms a Republican leader, and by so doing have given the most convincing evidence of their previous errors and inconsistencies. Nothing that they can do now will exonerate them from the charge of insincerity and inconsistency. In nominating Greeley and Brown they have sacrificed principle for expediency and the name Democrat is all that is left to them. How humiliating this idea must be to a genuine Democrat. There are many such, we believe, in the country—Democrats of the old school. They love the old principles, and can have no sympathy with the action of the Baltimore Convention. They will look upon the action of that Convention as a severance of the last tie of allegiance. They will turn away from the support of Greeley with disgust. Such men prefer an open enemy to a sycophant, a visionary dreamer, or a demagogue. Hence, if they vote at all, they will vote for Grant. The Democrats who support Greeley rely on controlling his Administration in case he is elected. Should so great a calamity as his election happen to the country, what evidence have they that Greeley will be any the less whimsical and crochety in that relation than in any other? None whatever. As a politician Greeley is peculiarly peevish and capricious, and the policy of his Administration would be influenced by those traits. There is but little likelihood, however, of his being elected. If we felt as sure of health, happiness and long life as we do of Greeley's defeat, we would be content.

They Will Hesitate.

We heard a Democrat say the other day that he preferred a Democratic nominee with defeat, than Greeley with success. He felt the former would be honorable while the latter would be a disgrace. He said that he would not vote for Greeley under any consideration, as between Grant and him he much preferred the former. There are many Democrats throughout the country, we are safe in conjecturing, who occupy the same or similar ground. Greeley, though Republican in principle, has failed to harmonize with the action of the party. While he has been a most violent and bitter enemy of the Democracy, he has at the same time made a very crooked path as a Republican. He has often allowed his individual preferences for men and measures to render him more of an enemy to the success of the party than a friend. He has shown the clearest indication that he is in the second childhood stage as a politician, as he is in that stage in point of years. Sensible men in the Democratic ranks will hesitate long before they vote for a man for President, who has so often allowed a petulant disposition to array him in opposition to the practical development of the principles which he professed to support. His past record is altogether too querulous to excite confidence.

The London Press on Greeley.

The English journals at London have commented on the nomination of Greeley at Baltimore in the following style: The Advertiser feels a sympathy for Greeley because he is a newspaper man. The Post declares such a reducing of a position to absurdity will largely tend to bring about abandonment of a system whereby the people of America have so long been deprived of a real voice in their choice of Presidents. The Telegraph calls Greeley a "political weather-cock," and says the Democrats, supported by the South, are endeavoring to unseat the General who saved the Union. The Standard thinks that Greeley would not be an eligible candidate were it not for his electioneering strength. He is as honest as a partisan can be, and occasionally shows glimpses of rough good sense, but he is of violent disposition, without regular education, and devoid of anything like experience in the administration of public affairs. In fact, he is a good yeoman of the last generation. Although Greeley is inferior to Adams, he is not inferior to Grant.

Greeley is Informed of his Nomination and makes a Gushing Speech.

On the 12th inst., in New York, Greeley was notified in a speech by Doolittle of his nomination by the Baltimore Convention. In response the delighted Sage spoke as follows:

I should need time were I to attempt to reply fitly and fully to this important and I need not say gratifying communication. It may be that I should reply in writing, but as I have addressed a letter, which has been pretty widely considered, to the Liberal Republican Convention, it may not be necessary. I can only say now that I accept your nomination in the same spirit in which it is offered. [Cheers.] I am at present in a position which many doubtless regard as a proud one, but which is to me an embarrassing one, because it involves the temporary, and I trust but temporary, annoyance of a misconstruction of my motives on the part of some valued and lifelong friends. I am confident that time alone is necessary to vindicate my motives to all and convince all, indeed, of the patriotism of the course I am pursuing and intended to pursue long before I was assured of such co-operation and sympathy. [Cheers.] The time will come, I hope, in good opportunity, when the world will see that you are no less Democrats because you have pursued the course you have, and that I am no less a Republican because I accept your nomination. [Cheers.]

I am not much in the habit of receiving nominations for the Presidency. [Great laughter.] I am, in consequence, unable to reply as readily as others might. [Renewed laughter.] I can only say that I will be happy to see all of you, or at least as many of you as can come, to my humble farm house, where I shall be to-morrow, and where we shall be able to converse and confer more freely than here. If you come, I shall be happy to make you welcome to the best the farm can afford. [Laughter and cheers.] And so I simply bid you farewell.

Senator Sumner said the other day: "I have a very high opinion of Greeley who I know labors in behalf of the same cause to which I have devoted my life. Of course I sympathize with the movement, but the time has not come, however. At present, no man is authorized to speak for me." Sumner is evidently loading up his mouth, and when he shoots it off, as he certainly will, a mammoth blunderbus will have spoken to the winds.

"Leave you, my friend," said a demoralized old toper, clinging to a lamp-post on a dark night—"leave you in a condition not to take care of yourself! His, now, ol' boy, now."

In the Portland Bulletin of the 13th inst, a local says that "in consequence of the illness of Rev. Mr. Daly there will be no service at the St. Stephen's Chapel on to-morrow, 14th inst." A person would suppose from that, that the Rev. Mr. Daly was a sickly preacher.
