DR. VAN CLEVE'S
Galvanic Abdominal Supporter
AND UTERINE REGULATOR.

THE MERITS OF THIS INSTRUMENT consist principally in the support it gives to the abdomen and spine. The belt is broad, supported by suspenders resting over the shoulders, and kept in shape by self-generating Galvanic Plates, which give a pleasant current.
The Regulator is also Galvanic; its Cap and Nozzles are made of Silver; its Stem, of Copper and Zinc, is hollow, that injections may be thrown through it, or into the neck of the Uterus. It can be so regulated by a thumb-screw as to meet any mal-position of the Uterus, and is unequalled in meeting any form of female disease.
Price, $3. Patented August 25, 1871, by W. Van Cleve, Central, Illinois.

Territory for Sale, or will receive Royalty for manufacture.
For State or Territorial rights to manufacture and sell on the Pacific Coast, apply to COLL. VAN CLEVE, Albany, Oregon.

Inhuman Brutes.

Yesterday morning a citizen called at the Twenty-eight precinct station house and reported that a child was drunk in the grocery corner of Washington and King streets. Officer Wilson was sent to investigate the matter, and upon arriving at the place found a boy, nine years of age, named Henry Garco, of 131 Carlton street, staggering around the bar room among a number of loafers who were seated in the place enjoying the unnatural movement and speeches of the child. He was taken to the station house in Greenwich street, and subsequently conveyed before Justice Ledworth at the Jefferson Market Police Court. He stated some person in the grocery, by means of threatening to put a lead on him, had compelled him to drink two glasses of gin, three glasses of lager and a glass of wine, which had been furnished him by the bar-keeper. Justice Ledworth ordered officer Carham, of the Court squad, to take the boy and accompany officer Wilson to the place where the liquor had been given him, and arrest all parties the boy might identify as having furnished and compelled him to drink the liquor. The officers shortly afterwards returned with John Moyland, the proprietor of the place, whom the boy positively identified as the party who gave him the liquor. Moyland denied the charge, and stated the boy came into his place about twelve o'clock in the morning, and stepping up to the bar, called for a glass of gin; that he refused to give it to him, as he noticed he was drunk at the time. Upon asking him where he got his liquor from, he stated on the corner of Houston and Greenwich streets, where a man had lots of it. As Moyland was in the act of ejecting him from the store he was taken with a fit, and cared for by him until recovered, when he sent to the station house for an officer and had him arrested. Several parties who were in the place at the time corroborated the statement of Moyland, who was discharged. The boy was committed to the care of Commissioners of Public Charities and Correction until Monday, when the case will be further investigated, and the party who sold him the liquor arrested if possible to find him.—N. Y. Herald, June 30.

The Beggar's Reproof.

Several years ago, as I was traveling in a stage coach it stopped for an instant at an inn door, in a small village, and the calm voice of a man in real distress was heard to say: "Gentlemen, I have eaten nothing to-day, and have no money. Will you give me a penny?" He appeared to be a man about sixty, with a traveler's staff in his hand, yet with an elastic step, and had the steady, undimmed gaze of an honest man. "Gentlemen," he continued, "I am not used to begging; I was once too proud; but there is one thing that can conquer pride, and that is starvation. 'Trust in God,' whispered an old man, as he handed him some money. 'Here is something for beer,' cried a sailor tauntingly, as he threw him a few pennies. The poor beggar stood leaning on his staff, looking steadily at the bloated face of the sailor, and before he moved to touch his gift, replied: 'If I had been in ale-houses in my youth, I should not now be walking twenty miles a day on a bit of bread and a drink of water. I should not now converse with a quick car and a sixty-three a step shaken only by sorrow and want. I should not look upon you with a face changed only by age and starvation.' He then stooped to pick up his money, gave them all a blessing, and proceeded on his toilsome journey.

WOMAN'S POWER FOR GOOD AND EVIL.

—One gifted and beautiful woman, if wrongly disposed, can scatter more seed of corruption and death, than a score of men with their utmost efforts. Her capabilities for good in the different departments of morals are equally great, and in such proportion to her powers, both for good and evil, must be her condemnation, if she is false to her holy stewardship. Society cannot be destroyed if woman is true, nor saved if woman is false. Besides society shows no unequal discrimination in regard to this particular class of offences. The rule applies to all. A profane woman, a drunken woman, a female thief or murderer excites always a greater horror and disgust than if the crime had been committed by a man. And this is right, and it will be an evil day for this world when women, in her sin, excites no more abhorrence than a man.

AN ANECDOTE OF FRANKLIN.

—In a speech before the House of Lords and Commons, Franklin was interrupted by a son of nobility with vociferous cries of "Cough him down; cough down that American mechanic. He was brought up at the hammer handle!" Calmly looking at the lordling, Franklin said, "It is fortunate for you that you were not, for your abilities never would have raised you above it." The philosopher and statesman concluded his discourse without further interruption.

"SELLING OFF AT COST."

We met Muggins the other day in a quarantary. He stood upon the street corner contemplating a pair of gloves which he held in his hand. We accosted him, and asked why he thus solemnly meditated. He gave a sudden start, and looked up. "Ah! ah! I've seen these gloves?" "We saw them." "I've known Smokeyton?" "We know him." "Well," explained Muggins, "I was coming by Smokeyton's this morning and I saw, stuck up all over the front of his store, big signs of—'Selling off at Cost!' Thinks I to myself, 'Here's a chance;' and I went in and bought these gloves and a half a dozen handkerchiefs. I asked Smokeyton, was he selling to me at cost; and he said 'Certainly.' I carried the handkerchiefs home, and asked my wife to hem them. She asked me what I paid for them; and when I told her, she laughed, and said I'd been cheated. They were not linen at all—only cotton—and she could buy any quantity of them for just one half what I had paid. I wouldn't believe her. I knew—or thought I knew—Smokeyton to be a man of honor. I came out and put on my new gloves. They ripped. Jones saw 'em and asked what I paid. I told him. He laughed, and said I'd been cheated. He could sell the very same article for less than half what I had paid.

Putting Pitch in their Boots.

I have heard of a company of hunters who caught a number of monkeys in the forests of Brazil, in the following amusing way: They had a lot of little boots made, just large enough to be drawn over a monkey's foot, and filled the bottom with pitch. With these they set out for the woods, and soon found themselves under the trees where the lively little fellows were leaping about among the branches, laughing by their tails, swinging themselves easily from one tree to another, and chattering noisily together, as if making observations upon their strange visitors that had come into their quarters. The hunters were too wise to attempt to catch them by climbing the tree; they might as well have expected to catch a flying bird as to lay hands on one of these nimble little fellows. They had an easier way, and one much more effectual; they simply sat down under the trees while the little chatter-boxes were rattling on over their heads, but never for a moment removing their eyes from them. They placed the little boots where they could be seen, and commenced taking off their own boots. Having done this, they let them stand near the little boots. All this the monkeys very carefully noticed. The hunters, now taking up their own boots, having carefully looked over them, drew them slowly, one after the other, upon their feet. Not a moment escaped the observation of the monkeys. Having replaced their boots, they hurried away to the thicket of undergrowth not far off, where they were hidden from sight of the monkeys, but where they could see everything that happened under the trees. They left the small boots standing in a row.

"The Old Woman."

It was thus, a few days since, we heard a strapping of sixteen designate the mother who bore him. By course husbands, we have heard wives so called occasionally, though in the latter case the phrase is more often used endearingly. At all times, as commonly spoken, it jars upon the ear and shocks the sense. An "old woman" should be an object of reverence above and beyond most all phases of humanity. Her very age should be her surest passport to courteous consideration. She has fought faithfully "the good fight," and come off conqueror. Upon her venerable face she bears the marks of the conflict in all its furrowed lines. The most pious of the ill of life have been hers; trials untold and unknown only to her God and herself, she has borne incessantly; and now, in her old age—her duty done! patiently awaiting her appointed time—she stands more honorable and deserving than he who has slain his thousands or stands triumphant upon the proudest fields of victory. Young man, speak kindly to your mother and even courtneys, tenderness of her. But a little time and you will see her no more forever. Her eye is dim, her shadow falls grayward. Others may love you when she has passed away—kind-hearted sisters, perhaps, or she whom of all the world you choose for a partner—she may love you warmly, passionately; children may love you fondly, but never again, never, while time is yours, shall the love of woman be to you as that of your old, trembling mother has been.—Key-stone Good Templar.

The LaCrosse Democrat.

—which once obtained an unenviable reputation for slang and obscene abuse, under the management of a man named "Brick" Pomeroy—was sold out by the Sheriff a few days ago to pay off a few of Pomeroy's debts.

An Eastern man in Salt Lake City.

—one day last week lost a pocket book containing $40,000 which was found by a little girl and returned to him. He gave the finder $500 in gold notes.
