[Concluded from first page.]

no chance to ask her, if I had dared," replied the daughter.

James Wrighton knew not how to thank the lady for her unexpected kindness; but she relieved his embarrassment, and put him entirely at ease.

"Excuse me, lady; but as you have been here some time, will not your family be worried unless they know where you are? I am at your service to go and tell them if you wish."

"I declare," exclaimed Miss Edson; "I never thought—what time can it be? Why, nearly 9 o'clock!" she said, looking at her watch. "And this was the night of the party, too! Well, I cannot help it now," she added, after a little reflection, "would you be so kind as to go to my house and tell father where I am! Here is the address," and she wrote it for him.

Mr. Edson arrived with all speed, and in a state of excitement and surprise not to be expressed in words; but he was a sensible man, and at heart was not displeased with what his daughter had done. As he took her home, after everything had been done for the comfort of the Wrighton family, he asked her to explain to him how she had fallen into the unusual course. She explained all to him, and the fond father drew his daughter closer to him as he commended her, and promised her pecuniary aid whenever she might wish it; but, he continued:

"What will all your fine circle of acquaintances say to this? You must have been sadly missed to-night."

"I don't care what they say, father. I am not ashamed of what I have done. I have learned a good lesson in an unexpected way, and while I shall occupy my usual place in society, I shall also do all I can to help those about me who are in want and distress."

The next morning Miss Edson went into Bagley & Co.'s store and asked to see the senior partner. Mr. Bagley came forward with his very best smile. Miss Edson said:

"Mr. Bagley, you are in my debt to the extent of five dollars."

"Ah! how is that? I will pay you, cheerfully."

"Yesterday I paid a very small portion of one of your debts, viz: five dollars on account, to Amy Wrighton."

"But I don't owe her that—not two dollars. Has she been in some way gaining your sympathy, and imposing upon you? Just like those brutes!" exclaimed he, angrily.

"No," replied Miss Edson, quietly; "she has neither been working upon my sympathy, nor imposing upon me. She is a worthy and industrious person, and as such I propose to befriend her and protect her from such men as you. You may say I am interfering with what is none of my affair, and meddling with a mutually formed agreement; but I am doing nothing of the kind, for anyone has a right to interfere when a poor, defenceless girl is imposed upon; and has a right to investigate an agreement which is made by unjust means. You are one of the men who have held up your head in society, and set yourself up as an example for others; and you are, at the same time, one of the very meanest of men. You offer a poor girl twelve cents, to make what you sell for from three to five dollars. You offer, but you do not pay even that small amount when it is due, but keep the child waiting when she needs the money for daily bread. Such men as you are the ones who do more than any others living to drive young girls toward destruction, by forcing them, thro' absolute want, to take the first step in the path so many descend, never to return. Our acquaintance is at an end, Mr. Bagley. Hereafter we are utter strangers. Good morning."

And the indignant young lady walked proudly from the store, leaving the crestfallen proprietor rather low-spirited as to his prospects of immediately marrying the object of his choice and adoration.

The Wrighton family now began to behold the dawn of a better day. Mr. Wrighton was assisted to a situation which would be permanent, and his wife, although she never could recover, yet improved to such an extent that she was able to do many things. Amy was employed by Miss Edson constantly, in many ways, and always was paid at rates which were by no means small.

"Did I not say," said James one night, as they were cozily seated before the fire, "that if we trusted in God, and tried to do our best, He would not suffer us to be afflicted with more than we were able to bear? Truly, he is good to us."

And what did fashionable society say about all this? Oh! fashionable society was very much shocked at first. It was so unaccountable. But it could not discard Miss Edson. She was too highly prized, and retained her place, though continually befriending the poor. Society gradually ceased to talk; and when some one unwisely ventured to remark, although in a laughing manner, "who ever would have thought it, of Miss Edson?"—a handsome gentleman, upon whose arm Miss Edson was leaning, quietly said, "I would," and looked lovingly down into the bright, happy eyes which were soon to become even as his own.

Editorial Courtesy.

Talk no more of the Oregon style.

The following specimens of journalistic cussitude in the way of style, taken from papers published in Southern Illinois (Egypt), beats us all hollow:

In the office of the Carmi Times they use shoe-pegs for type, set them up in an old quart cup, take proofs in a boot-jack, lock the forms up in a cheese hoop, and run off their addition—six quires of brown waste paper—on a neighbor's cider press; their ink is manufactured out of equal parts of ashes and coal tar. The editorial department is presided over by some irresponsible beings lately escaped from the "Asylum for Idiotic and Feeble-minded children." As soon as they can procure an old, worn-out set of stencil plates and a piece of red chalk, they will issue their cabbage leaf in a new and improved form. "Oh! that will be Joy-ful." We don't charge anything for this advertisement.—Mt. Carmel Register.

The above is both flattery and slander—flattery for the Carmi Times; vile, base, unmitigated slander against the "shoe-pegs, old quart-cup, boot-jack, cheese hoop, brown paper, cider press, ashes, coal tar, idiots, worn-out stencil-plates, red chalk and cabbage leaf."—Mt. Vernon News.

Another sentence of death has been commuted to imprisonment for life by executive clemency. It is the sentence of Donovan, the murderer of George Minchell, at Clayton, Cal., in 1871, lately pronounced at San Francisco.

BARELY ESCAPED BURIAL ALIVE.

—A woman in Vren Cysylite, Wales, was ill, and apparently died, lately. Preparations were made for the funeral, but just before the time to place the body in the coffin her husband perceived that, though insensible, she had moved. Friction and stimulants freely applied caused an indefinite postponement of her burial. The man now pleads temporary insanity for his rash act.

A gentleman in Iowa who recently became the father of a fine boy, and who naturally deemed it the handsomest child ever born, thought he saw a chance to gain a reputation for liberality without the expenditure of any money. So he offered a premium of $100 for the prettiest baby that should be exhibited at an approaching fair, not doubting that the judges must award the prize to his own. There were nine entries, comprising seven white and two negroes, and—one of the negro babies gained the premium.
