Chinese Horses

Two or three times a year, writes a correspondent, treops of horses come to Peking from Mongolia. By the aid of Chinese horse-jockies Europeans make their selections. Not one of the horses have ever been groomed or mounted, and it is by no means easy for even an expert in horse flesh to know what kind of an animal it is he buys, covered as the horse is with a thick coat, dlaving purchased your horse then commences the real work. Usually the beast is five years old, a gelding, and gashed all over with scars where he has been cut during his travels. His mane falls clean down to his knees -you can't see his head for his fore-top, and his tail sweeps the ground. It takes no end of care to dress him up in order to get at the real shape of the beast. It requires some management to take him all of a sudden from a life in the plains to the stifled atmosphere of a Chinese stable.

The Chinese horse has got wonderfully straight, sinewy legs and a pretty game head, though not elegantly built about the body. Oue thing about these horses which gives no end of bother is their dislike for Europeans. They are as gentle as can be with the Chinese, but when a European approaches them they curl back their ears, squeal with temper, and do their best to kick them. It has happened to me more than once on my travels, to have been worried by them. I remember one winter day-when at some distance from the city, just about nightfall, when it was bitter cold -to have tied my horse up by the bridle to a tree. The wretched beast kept me busy for a full hour before I could mount him. The blessed Chinese, who might have helped me, seemed to enjoy the sport. Fortunately, after a while, he wound himself up by the bridle, and at the risk of having my brains knocked out, I at last mounted be, they have nevertheless no end of go in them. Usually they are pony bailt, but, with a weight of 150 pounds, I have known a little fellow to run his mile in two minutes and eight seconds, and the two miles in fear minutes and thirty-five seconds. Where, however, the Chinese horse excels is for long journeys. They will go all day without feeding, and at night, if they go a space handful of hay or straw, sprinkled with a little bran or meal, they are generally all right for the long journeys next day.

The tellowing remedy for dyspepsia is said to be very effective in some coses: Sweet cream or sweet milk, the richer the better; use as often as convenient. Whenever any burning our sour sensation at the stomach appears, drink half a pint of sweet milk, and relief is evident. Make tree use of it at meals. Total abstinence from the use of tobacco, coffee, strong drink, or anything very sour, must be strotly adhered to. Coffee being the worst of all things for dyspeptics, must be entirely avoided. Dyspeptics should also remember that as their troubles come from over-eating, or eating irregularly, or some abuse of the stomach, the matter of a limited diet of nourishing food, taken regularly, is quite as important as anything in the shape of medicine.

A preliminary examination of coffee for admixture is best made by gently strewing the powder upon the surface of cold water. The oil contained in coffee prevents the particles from being readily wetted by the water, thus causing them to float. Chicory, burnt sugar, &c., contain no oil, and their caramel is very quickly extracted by the water, with production of a brown color, while the particles themselves rapidly sink to the bottom of the water. On stirring the liquid, coffee becomes tolerably uniformly diffused without sensibly coloring the water, while chicory and other sweet roots quickly give a dark brown turbid infusion. Roasted cereals do not give so distinct a color.

Ordinary mucilage, made from gumarabic, does not fix paper to pasteboard, or to metallic surfaces. These disadvantages are overcome by adding a solution of sulphate of aluminum, in ten times its quantity of water. Ten grains of aluminum sulphate are sufficient for 250 grains of mucilage. Prepared in this way it will not become moldy. Again, according to Hirshberg, a few drops of strong sulphuric acid are added to the gum solution, and the precipitated sulphate of lime allowed to settle. Solutions prepared in this way a year and a half ago have neither become moldy nor lost their adhesive power.

Almost any black ribbons which need smoothing out and have become a little rusty may be improved by rubbing with a cloth dipped in ink, with perhaps a little cold tea added, if the ink is rather thick, and then drawn through the fingers till dry, or wound upon a bottle and pinned snugly upon it, instead of spoiling by ironing, as many make a practice of doing with wrinkled ribbons.

An editorial writer in the Cincinnati Times says that "the Buckeye girl flirts desperately down to the proposal. Then she accepts, or she refuses and the young man is turned out like an empty are, to shade his ears and graze in Commons."

A Heleus, Montana, paper says that over $100,000 have been invested in the construction of new ditches in that Territory this year, but the supply of water will be very short, unless abundant showers of rain set in.

The horse got to bucking and the little fellow falling, the animal struck him on the right leg breaking both bones below the lenes and inflicting glastly flesh wounds.

Handsaws in America and England have the teeth pointed from the handle, while in Asiatic countries and in Greece they are made with teeth pointed the other way. The latter must be operated by pulling them, the former by pushing. In delicate work, and where very fine small saws are used, the Eastern saw is the best. The Orientals differ from us in setting the teeth of the saw also. They turn a group of a dozen one way, and the next group the other, while we alternate one on one side, the next on the other.

The trustees of the Tichborne estate have been compelled to ask permission to effect a mortgage on the property, to raise funds to pay the expenses of the Orton trials. The amount of these costs are $460,000. The cost of the criminal prosecution, which was paid by the Government, was $275,000, so that the entire cost of the litigation growing out of Orton's claim, amounted to $735,000.

It is announced as an iteresting fact that for $1,000 a man can buy a ticket that will carry him around the globe. This seems like useless extravagance, when, if he will stand still, the globe itself will carry him around the same distance in twenty-four hours for nothing.

The Czar of Russia has done himself credit in signalizing his visit to England by having a formal announcement made that all the Poles now in exiled in England and other countries, except two or three known assassius, are at liberty to return to their native land.
