THE COMPROMISE.

Public sentiment is divided on the plan adopted by the Congressional committee to settle the Presidential question. On the 22d inst., Senator Morton in his place in the Senate, made a great speech in opposition to the measure-according to the dispatches, .. one of the grand efforts of his life, claiming the entire attention of the Sen-- late and the crowded galleries. Senator Blaine, who was sworn in and took This seat on the same day, is also reported to be opposed to the compromise. The ground assumed by some who propose voting for it is, that it will prevent war and give peace to the country! Of course we are among those who are desirous of peace; but if, as nrged by some of our ablest men, the measure is unconstitutional, we are opposed to its adoption. We are among those who believe that the Constitution fully provides for counting the votes and declaring who, has been elected President and Vice President, and we want those provisions carried out. And we are among those who believe that Hayes and Wheeler have been fairly and squarely elected, and that the inauguration of Mr. Hayes will cause no war.

NIPPING AWFUL CLOSE.

Before and during the rebellion there were a number of individuals scattered throughout the Northern States, and, it is said, they were even to be found in . Oregon, who were known under the advice. general cognomen of Copperheads, who devoted a large portion of their time to cursing the Union and Union men, and, while professing the greatest love for the Southern Confederacy, atterly refused, on account of their "wive's relations," doubtless, to go down to that South they so dearly loved and take up arms in her defense. Of course, as these copperhead "patriots" took no part or share in the dangers incident to the war, on either side, a large number of them are still alive, and the Presidential trouble now upon us has brought them to the front again; and now as then they are threatening blood ! b-lud ! if they are not allowed to dictate who shall be inaugurated President! Ben Hill, himself an active participator in the rebellion, fitly characterizes these "braves" as "invincible and invisible in war." An exchange hits these "cops" another dab tion to the compromise plan for the right where they live when it says; "The truth is, a man who wouldn't fight for his country on either side of a question, has no country, and is a coward." It is safe to wager that the man who is so loud in his threats and apparently so anxious for bloody war, that such a man will be thefirst to dodge the "drait" (he'll never volunteer), by some hook or crook, no matter from which side it comes.

OUR FISHERIES.

We have twenty-six canneries on the Lower Columbia river, and one at the Lower Cascade on the same river. These canneries have a capacity of twenty-five thousand cases annually each, a grand total for the twenty-seven carperies of 675,000 cases, which, at $5 per case, makes a sum total annually of $3,375,000. Of course the taking of this immense number of salmon annually will, at an early day, not only deminish the catch, but ultimately destroy the salmon, and with them the immense tain it. A PROLONGED EUCHRE CONTEST .-No game of cards, aside from the exclusively gambling games, played for money, and mostly in gambling houses, is so popular in America as enchre. Not so complex and pressing in its demand upon the attention of the players as whist, and yet affording considerable latitude for the exercise of judgment and skill, in many thousands of homes it affords a staple re-ource of evening amusements. Not many instances of so prolonged a contest at the game can, however, probably be given as is instanced in the experience of four gentle-men of this city. In 1870, seven years ago, they made agreement to organize a enchre party, playing one night a week at their alternate houses. This agreement has been kept up almost without a break, only the most pressing engagement or unavoidable cause being allowto interfere with the "euchre pighte." The meetings commence each the fall, and continue through the win-ter months. Since 1870 they have held 117 of these meetings and have played 2,919 games. The same two are alaccurately kept, now stands A and partner 1,489 games, B and partner 1,430 games. The contest is still going on and is likely to continue, as the parties take as much interest if not more now than at any period of the struggle. It should also be mentioned that it is played only for the hour of heating and the amusement of the game. No betting is allowed or has has even been proposed, consequently there has been no disagreements beyond amicable discussions as to the best mode of playing.
