AN INCIDENT.

Mr. Editor:—By your permission I will pen a few lines with regard to the evil of all evils that exists in our midst, and that is Intemperance.

Look back through the vista of the last two years and see how many of our citizens have went down, step by step, to a drunkard's grave.

Are not our saloon keepers doing a fearful work? How many of our young men, yea, and of our older ones, too, are going the same awful road, step by step, without perceiving it, and will eventually take up in the grave of the drunkard?

There is just one way to stop the dreadful evil, and that is for each young man, and older ones, too, to resolve, and then have manhood enough to stick to the resolution, to not drink another drop of intoxicating drink.

If every person could be induced to do this, our friends, the saloon keepers, would soon be induced to turn their attention to some other employment that would be less destructive to the well-being of their fellowman. But to the incident:

Three young men, one of them a married man, who were standing in a place secluded from the public gaze, had a small bottle, which looked to contain intoxicating drink, and were handing it around, and then it was stowed away in the pocket of the married man.

With two of these young men I am well acquainted. I saw the performance as I passed them, and they know that I saw them. God also saw them; but of this they may not have such a realizing sense. Now if these young men should continue this course for a time, will they not have formed an appetite for strong drink that will lead them, step by step, to the gutter and then to the grave?

I would say to them as one who wishes to see them assert their true manhood, and stick to it, boys, resolve now, and ask God to help you stick to the resolution, that you will henceforth never partake of the intoxicating cup. This is the safe and the only safe course for you.

I would now suggest to the clergy of our city, if it would not be a good thing to inaugurate a series of temperance lectures, to be held at the Court House, one lecture a week, or one each two weeks, each minister to deliver a lecture and to arrange between themselves the time and subject each shall occupy.

Each might find his subject in the passage of scripture, and illustrate by the course of the three young men above named. Much good might be done in this way by convincing young men that it is to their interest to avoid the path of the destroyer.

Before closing I will relate another incident, which would give our ministers and temperance lecturers, of the evils of frequenting the saloon: A few days ago in passing a saloon I heard a voice in loud tones behind the screen in the saloon, which I knew well to be that of a man who makes a profession of the name of the Lord Jesus. O, what a reproach on the cause which he professes. JOHN SMITH.
