OUR TRAFIC WITH THE WORLD.

Under this head the Telegram has collated some very interesting facts, which we transfer to our columns: The foreign trade of the United States for the past year shows that we imported from the following named countries $170,993,036, while our exports to the same countries were only $47,626,297. We buy of the Argentine Republic $3,602,736, while we sell her but $1,519,190. Brazil sells us six times as much as we get from that coffee growing country, which is the chief article of export: the imports from that empire are $45,453,178, while the exports aggregate but $7,253,218; Central America furnishes us $1,819,120, while those States get of us but $938,102. The greatest disproportion exists in our Oriental trade. We get pretty nearly the whole tea crop of China and Japan for a very insignificant exchange. From China we import $12,360,851, and we export there but $1,390,360. Japan furnishes us $15,505,753, and gets of us only $1,698,457. She must be a better customer or we won't drink so much of her tea. Of all countries Japan has the best of us. Poor revolutionary ridden Mexico manages to sell us three times the amount she buys of us; our imports from there being $12,505,735, while our exports are but $4,706,778. From Uruguay we import $1,804,552, and export to that locality $1,126,123. Cuba manages to get nearly fifty million of dollars clear in selling us sugar; we pay her $72,062,966, and get back but $26,169,791. We import from Venezuela $5,875,715, and return there $3,424,178. The principal countries where we sell our cotton, breadstuffs, provisions and petroleum, and where the balance of trade is greatly in our favor, are in Europe. We import from thence $290,294,676, and our exports in that direction aggregate $586,521,715, as follows: We buy of Great Britain $176,279,227, and sell her $422,416,533. Our imports from Germany are $35,488,117, and our exports are $51,107,147. Holland sells us $9,125,057, and buys of us $13,692,513. Our trade with Russia consists of imports, $1,112,152; exports, $11,922,285. Italy exports to us $7,628,772, and takes in return $7,770,470. We import from Turkey $439,647, and find a market there for $3,388,371 of our productions. We sell to Belgium three times the amount we buy from her, the imports being $5,442,048; exports, $16,092,117. From Austria we import $449,869, and export $1,554,819. Denmark sells us $498,366, and buys to the extent of $1,586,684. With Hayti we have a trade amounting in imports to $3,076,199, and in exports to $4,732,724. We have a balance of trade in our favor with Chili. We import thence $755,222, and export there $2,157,722. Our trade with France is about evenly divided, aggregating about $50,000,000 in imports, and the same in exports. The imports for the past year aggregate $411,287,712, while the exports amount to $634,148,012. As will be seen those countries where the balance of trade is against us, with the exception of China and Japan, are comparatively near neighbors of the United States commercially, and our inferiors in industrial development, and we ought to sell them the large amount of supplies they import from other countries.

Samuel J. Tilden is to be the Democratic candidate for United States Senator in New York in place of Roscoe Conkling. The State Senators elected this fall will hold over the following year, and will have a vote upon Mr. Conkling's successor. If the Democrats succeed, and have a majority on the joint ballot in 1879, and if Samuel J. Tilden is then alive, he will be elected Senator. But "the best laid plans of mice and men gang after agley," and it is barely possible that Mr. Conklingmay be his own successor.

CAUGHT AT LAST.

A most extraordinary event has occurred at Oban, which I give in detail, having been an eye witness to the whole affair. I allude to the standing and capture of the veritable sea serpent in front of the Caledonian Hotel, George street, Oban. About 4 o'clock, yesterday, an animal or fish, evidently of gigantic size, was seen sporting in the bay near Heather Island. Its appearance evidently perplexed a large number of spectators assembled on the pier, and several telescopes were directed toward it. A careful look satisfied us that it was of the serpent species, it carrying its head full twenty-five feet above water. A number of boats were soon launched, and proceeded to the bay, the crews armed with such weapons as could be got handy. Under the directions of Malcolm Nicholson, our boatman, they headed the monster, and some of the boats were within thirty yards of it when it suddenly sprang half length out of the water and made for the sea. A random fire from several volunteers with rifles seemed to have no effect upon it. Under Mr. Nicholson's orders the boats now ranged across the entrance of the bay, and by screams and shouts turned the monster's course, and it headed directly for the breast wall of the Great Western Hotel. One boat, containing Mr. Donald Campbell, the Fiscal, had a most narrow escape, the animal actually rubbing against it. Mr. Campbell and his brother jumped overboard, and were picked up unhurt by Mr. John D. Hardie, saddler, in his small yacht the Flying Scud. The animal seemed thoroughly frightened, and as the boats closed in the volunteers were unable to fire more, owing to the crowds assembled on the shore. At a little past 6 the monster took the ground on the beach in front of the Caledonian Hotel, in George street, and his proportions were not fully visible. In his frantic exertions, with his tail sweeping the beech, no one dared to approach. The stones were flying in all directions, one seriously injured a man named Baldy Barrow, and another breaking the window of the Commercial Bank. A party of volunteers under lieutenant David Menzie now assembled and fired volley after volley into the neck, according to the directions of Dr. Campbell, who did not wish for scientific reasons, that the configurations of the head should be damaged. As there was a bright moon, this continued till nearly ten o'clock, when Mr. Stephens of the Commercial bank, waded in and fixed a strong rope to the animal's head, and by the exertion of some seventy folks it was securely dragged above high water mark. Its exact appearance as it lies on the beach is as follows:

The extreme length is 101 feet and the thickest part is about 25 feet from the head, which is 11 feet in circumfranch. At this part is fixed a pair of fins, which are four feet long by nearly 7 across the sides. Further back is a long dorsal fin, extending for at least 12 or 13 feet and 5 feet high in front, and tapering to 1 foot. The tail is more of a flattened termination to the body proper than anything else. The eyes are very small in proportion, and elongated, and gills of the length of 2½ feet behind. There are no external ears, and as Dr. Campbell did not wish the animal handled until he communicated with some eminent scientific gentleman we could not ascertain if there were teeth or not.

Great excitement is created, and the country people are flocking in to view it. This morning Mr. Duncan Clerk, writer, took possession of the monster in the rights of Mr. M'Fee, of Appin, and Mr. James Nichol, writer, in the name of the Crown.

People of Washington county will hold a basket picnic July 4th, on the Hillsboro park grounds. Burning of firecrackers is prohibited. Prof. J. D. Robb will read the Declaration. J. W. Nesmith, W. D. Hare, Dr. F. A. Bailey, and Rev. W. Jolly were chosen orators.

Mrs. Dean's four babies have produced great excitement in St. Louis, four babies at a birth being rather a remarkable circumstance anywhere. One of them is dead, but great honors are bestowed upon the three survivors. On change a subscription for their benefit yielded $127; the police added $12 50, and the whole has been invested for the benefit of this comparatively numerous little family.

All that Pendleton will have to do to become United States Senator is thus stated by the Cincinnati Enquirer: "George will only have to see that no man from this end of the State gets the nomination for Governor, then elect a Legislature, and then beat Hurd, Ewing, Payne, Jewett, and a few others. It's a walk over."

An Alabama man refused to take some bank bills tendered him, because the mules engraved upon them were not properly harnessed. He said the engraver had put the breeching on the lead mules and they should have been put on the wheel—hence the bills were refused.

The Tribulations of a Doctor.

At the banquet given to the Missouri Medical Association at the St. James Hotel, Kansas City, on April 18th, the chairman called on Dr. Willis P. King, of Sedalia, to respond to the toast, "The Central District Medical Association." The inimitable drollery of the doctor's manner is, also, full of humor. He said:

Mr. President and Gentlemen: As I have not prepared a speech I will have to go off by spontaneous combustion.

I know that it would be the proper thing for me to say that I did not expect to be called upon for a speech tonight; but it would not be true. I am thus particular about telling the truth in the beginning because I want to get your confidence, when I will proceed to lead you astray by telling you some things that are not true.

I am glad that I have been called upon to say something in regard to the experiences of the young physician, for I have a warm and tender place in my heart for the young doctors. No one knows except the young doctor himself, how his heart palpitates over his first case of sickness, and how his soul yearns for an epidemic of measles or chickenpox!

After I graduated, eleven years ago, I started out from Sedalia, on horseback, to the far southwest, where my family had moved while I was at college. (I will remark, while passing, that the first thing I did when I arrived at the state of manhood was to get a family. I had heard that it was best, and that no family should be without one.)

On my second night out I stayed all night on the banks of the Osage river. During the evening a neighbor came in and saw my pill-bags. When I started out the next morning I met the same neighbor in company with an awkward youth of about eighteen summers, or something thereabouts. The youth had his hand tied up in a bundle about the size of a yearling mule. He asked me if I was a doctor. I told him I thought I was. I really did think so, gentlemen.

He proceeded to undoe his hand by unwrapping a blue cloth from it. He then took off an old red shawl, unwinding toward him. He proceeded in this way until he finally reached his hand. He had a felon. We went to the house I remembered the instructions of my friend Dr. Gregory, to get a patient behind you when you go to lance a felon, with his arm under your arm. I got him in this position, put my knife down to the bone, and walked out on his phalanx!

He grabbed his sick hand with the well one and hopped around on one foot and howled like a wolf with a grindstone on his tail, while I washed my knife. He got out his only half dollar. I took it and felt like a highway robber.

I had a young and tender conscience then, gentlemen, but I have got over all that now. I can take the last cent a man has without any compunctions. I would have liked very much to have kept that half dollar, as it was my first fee; but I had to spend it. I was like the boy in the novel—poor, but honest. I am poor yet. I arrived home in due time and went into the practice. I had all the experiences common to young physicians. I met the old lady who doctored Sam Slocum's wife when she was sick. She was handy with a mustard draft and hot poultice. She wore a wart on her nose and a red bandanna handkerchief on her hand.

The old lady and I became fast friends and would have remained so until this day had she not taken the cramp colic. I was called to see her and concluded to cup her. I had no cupping-glasses, and concluded to use a glass tumbler. The old lady had a good deal of looseness in the parietes of her abdomen. When I put on the glass her whole abdomen seemed to run right into the glass, and when I desired to take it off I could not. I worked and pulled and the old lady howled. I groped in unutterable darkness for a quarter of an hour and then got a hammer and broke the glass! We never spoke again.

The southwest was at that time settled by a nomadic class of people. They are not there now. They moved to Arkansas every fall and came back to Missouri every spring. Each family generally worked a yoke of steers in an old shack of a wagon, with a blind horse or a lame one in the lead. They generally had about ten or a dozen children, four or five dogs and an old gun! I waited on them in stables, tents, wagons, under wagons and out of doors. I sometimes found as many as three or four in one bed, and they would emit an odor somewhat akin to that emenating from a saddle blanket full of wet cats. I had a young and tender stomach then also. I have since developed up a stomach that don't get its back up at every passing bad smell!

But of all things that afflicted me in my early experience as a physician, the idea of a consultation was the worst. I dreaded meeting the old physicians. I thought gray hairs and wisdom were synonymous words. There was a man practicing in that country who had been there—well, ever since the flood. He had a wonderful reputation. I put the thing off as long as I could, but the inevitable came at last. One of the prominent men in my neighborhood got sick with pneumonia, and when the lung had solidified, and he had passed near unto death, I honestly informed the family of his dangerous condition. Of course they wanted Smith. I call him Smith because that was not his name. Smith came, and I met him with fear and trembling. He wore a No. 3. hat and a No. 13 boot. I gave him the history of my case and the treatment, and awaited the coming storm. I expected to be overwhelmed with a flood of technicalities and with his wonderful knowledge of pathological anatomy. He looked at me through his spectacles with the gravity of an owl and said:

"Doctor, did you ever try a black cat-skin poultice in these cases?"

I admitted that in my ignorance I never had.

I thought it a good time for me to get out of the case. So I informed the family that, as Dr. Smith had been their family physician before they knew me, he had better take the case. They were only too glad to make the change. That was an awful and calmitous night on cats.

The man died, and Smith told them that if he had seen the case two hours earlier, and had succeeded in getting a 'leetle' blacker cat, he would have saved him. The family still think so. Sacred be the memory of Smith; he has been gathered to his fathers.

My next consultation was with a man whom, for convenience, I shall call Jones. I rode fifteen miles on a dark night to meet him. When I went into the cabin I was met by a terrible smell which gave me spasmodic asthma. I thought they were burning old boot heels. Jones arose from one corner of the room and introduced himself. I saw at once that he was a man of high standing in the profession—six feet three in his stocking feet. He had but one eye, and his nose looked like a red lantern in a torch-light procession. When he towered above me and beamed on me with his good eye, and that nose, I almost wilted. I asked whence came that awful smell. He said that he was burning chicken feathers under the bed to bring away a retained placenta! He added that he had always heard the Dominicker feathers were the best. The pot was then removed on account of my asthma. When I came to examine the case I found the poor woman covered all over with ears of hot corn. The doctor said that he had always heard that boiled corn was good in those cases. I told him I thought it was good—for horses. The woman died, but I am sorry to say that Jones still lives.

I have been requested to give, for the benefit of those who make a specialty of diseases of the ear, a case of deafness that I didn't treat. The man came into my office with a peculiar, listening expression on his face, and putting his right hand behind his ear, he said, in a voice that showed evident enlargement of his tonsils:

"Is this Dr. King's office? Doctor, I've come to see if you could cure my deafness. I've been deaf for a long time, and I've tried a good many doctors, and they ain't done me no good, and I've paid out a heap of money, and I'm a mighty poor man; you mustn't charge me much. Do you think you can cure me?"

"Hah!" I said, "I don't know."

He said, "Hah! I don't know."

I said at the top of my voice, "may be you had better go to an aurist."

"Dr. Forrest," said he, "is he a good doctor?"

"I didn't say Forrest," I replied; 'I said aurist, a man who treats diseases of the ear," in a voice loud enough to split him from end to end.

He said; "Hah!"

"Oh, go down stairs and soak your feet," I said, not knowing what else to say.

"Soakum & Peet," said he; "do they cure deafness? Do you think they can cure me?"

I adjourned on him to get rid of him. I am going to send him to my friend Dr. Spencer.

Mr. President, I am glad I came here, and especially so glad to meet so many gentlemen of the profession. I always go away from these meetings feeling about two feet taller than when I came. After partaking of the hospitality of the people of Kansas City and enjoying this magnificent banquet, I feel like staying here always; but as I can't do that, I have concluded to take Kansas City home with me. It would make such a nice suburb to Sedalia. I came near going home this afternoon, and if I had I would not have been here to-night. I believe that is a logical statement. Next to being truthful, I desire to be logical. Gentlemen, I thank you for your kind attention.

L. W. Neatherlin was going to his ranch on the Cibolo, in Atascosa county, and W. H. Slaughter and several others hove in sight and began to play Indian, just for fun. He took them for Indians and halted and tied his team, and taking ambuscade waited the approach to within Spencer rifle range. The bravest warior dashed ahead of his fellows, and Neatherlin drew a bead on him and shot him through.—Galveston News.
