BUENA VISTA, Aug. 14, 1871. Polk county prospects, financially, were never so good. The crops of wheat, barley, oats, hay, and last though not least in importance, hops, have in no past time proment and ised as good a yield as at present, and the increase in acreage, with good prices, tend to make the people social and energetic if not happy and contented. This county being more rolling on the surface than Linn, the crops of cereals naturally come in carlier, and in consequence the warehouses are fast filling up. If the present fine weather for harvesting continues but a few weeks, this part of the country will feel rich indeed, as the much coveted dollar can be realized for all the good wheat, and it is being fast secured.

Business in the village is running on a safer basis than usual, and we think on a better basis for all parties. The farming community go in debt less, and count the cost in making purchases more closely. So the laboring man and storekeeper are more likely to get their part of the money than in the former way of purchasing as long as there is anything to be bought on a credit. But while the present seems so prosperous and the future outlook so prom-Ising, the counterpart is not entirely abside of good, and possessing a large degree of social organism-just such a man as munity.
