FRIDAY, AUGUST 20, 1880.

Girls' Manners.

If our little girls greet their brothers and sisters, and perhaps even their parents, boisterously; if, instead of "Good morning," they cry, "Halloo, papa! Halloo, mamma!" and call to playmates in the street in the same rough manner, who will be surprised if this style follows them as they grow up and appear as young ladies? Referring to this unladylike manner and mode of address, a gentleman writes that, passing two pretty, well-dressed, stylish-looking young ladies in the public streets, he was surprised to hear one meet the other with "Halloo, Sid!" and the other responded, "Halloo, Tude!" to her friend's greeting; and he remarks: It was just what two lounging young men might have said, or stable boys, for that matter. It might not have been so much out of the way for the latter, but I confess it sounded very odd and offensive in what I supposed to be two well-bred young ladies; as much so as if I had heard two beautiful gray and rose-colored birds begin to swear. It was so unnatural, so out of place. It may be "the style" for young girls or ladies to greet each other with a "Halloo!" but I can't like or get used to it. These things may seem but a trifle, but they make all the difference between nice things and very common things. We usually prefer sweet, gentle, refined girls to those who are coarse and hoydenish. Girls may fall into this free-and-easy, unladylike habit through their brothers' example; but sisters were given to refine and soften the coarser nature of their brothers. If they do not do this we shall no longer find in our sisters refined and refining companions, but the coarse ways and rough speech of young men in fiances. Is it not just as easy to imitate the graceful manners and refined speech of a lady as those of a rude, uncultivated boy? The same general rules for correct and pleasant behavior are safe for boys and girls, ladies and gentlemen. A gentleman may entertain the highest respect for a lady, and be on the most friendly and intimate terms, but if a true gentleman, his respect will withhold him from carelessness or roughness in speech or action. And no lady who is truly refined will brook anything approaching a too familiar tone. It is but just, however, to acknowledge that a lady's manner will fix the metres and bounds of the liberty which may be offered. When boys and girls, young men and maidens, are allowed to fall into the absurdities of low, foolish, meaningless talk it seems to dwarf them intellectually; they can find nothing of interest or importance to say, and, therefore, make up for sense by filling every sentence with needless exclamations, exaggerations, or misplaced adjectives.—Mrs. H. W. Beecher in Christian Union.

Anchoring a Horse.

A good story is told of an old mariner who keeps a little hotel down here (writes a correspondent from Coney Island, New York's seaside resort.) His wife was very anxious to have a horse, an animal in which the old gentleman took but little interest, and the old lady finally won her point, and got her horse. The steed was of an erratic and playful disposition, and used, on the least provocation, to tear madly along the beach, and succeeded in "spilling" the old lady several times. At last the captain, who had never driven the beast, volunteered to break him of his vicious habit; so, getting another old salt to aid him, he procured a hedge anchor, with a stout line attached. Fastening the end of the line around the axle, and putting the anchor into the phaeton, the fiery untamed was hitched up, and the two gentlemen started for a drive along the shore. Soon the vicious animal espied something which gave him an excuse to run away, and immediately dashed off with frightful velocity. The captain dropped the reins and summoned all hands to "let go the anchor." The anchor was let go, and caught firmly in the sand. The unsuspecting quadruped pranced joyously along until he got to the end of the rope, and then he paused—paused so suddenly that the phaeton was demolished and the two old gentlemen shot up into the air like a couple of sky-rockets, coming down in a fearfully dilapidated condition. The horse is now for sale.

A Night Mistake.

The Paradise Reporter is responsible for the following: A lady and gentleman with their two daughters engaged apartments at a local hotel, room 22, being assigned to the father and mother, and room 20 to the young ladies. After retiring, one of the young ladies, from some cause or other, being unable to sleep, arose, thinking that after a brisk promenade in the corridor she might more effectually seek the dominion of the drowsy god. And after a ten minute go-as-you-please she returned to what she supposed to be her room, jumped into bed, planted her small 6's in her supposed sister's stomach, embraced her tenderly and exclaimed: "Darling I am cold; warm me up a little!"—to which a deep bass voice responded: "With pleasure, dear." With a horrified shriek she sprang for the door and happily found room 20, the next apartment. Fearing to encounter the knight of her midnight adventure, she feigned sickness, and for several days could not be persuaded to leave her room. She finally ventured forth to breakfast, however, her vis-a-vis being a fine looking young fellow of military appearance. In the course of the meal she had occasion to ask him to pass the salt when, horrors, the same bass voice replied "with pleasure." She fainted—recovered—was introduced and married. Moral—all's well that ends well.

A Georgia colored debating society was lately discussing: "Which is best for the laboring man, to work for wages or part of the crop?" An old "anoole" spoke the sense of the meeting when he said: "Hole was de best, ef dey could be brung to godder somehow."

Sensational Stories.

What is the direct effect of cheap newspapers and sensational stories on the minds of the young? Surely not a beneficial one. In many of them the chief object is to throw around scenes of vice a fascinating charm. Crime is often presented as involving a manly development of courage; and what is wanting in attraction and charm in the plot of the story, or the delineation of character and scene, is made up by pictorial illustrations which are lewd and imposing. The consequence is that the minds of the young are filled with romantic pictures of crime, the moral character is slowly but surely undermined, and a rapid transition is made from the virtues of home to the vices of the street, from the instruction of the school to the chastisement of the prison. The object is a sad one to contemplate; and painful though the fact may be it is all too true that many of the libertines, burglars, swindlers and murderers who are now cursing society have received their first impulses to crime from the fascinating but immoral literature of the press. The subject is exciting, as it should do, a painful sensation among many classes of social and political as well as moral reformers. At recent congresses in this country and Great Britain it has received no more than the attention it deserves. Many stirring appeals have been made, and it may be hoped that they will have their designed effect. It is not enough to expose the pernicious character and tendency of these immoral publications, or to place them under summary arrest. The subject should be kept before the public, and in the writings of the day only the dark side of crime should be touched upon. The immoral in popular literature must be met and counteracted by that which is positive on the side of virtue, and both cheap and fascinating in price and style. Efforts hitherto made have not been sufficient to check the evil, which is, alas, a growing one.

The Responsive Chord.

In the early spring of 1863, when the Confederate and Federal armies were confronting each other on the opposite hills of Stafford and Spotsylvania, two bands chanced one evening, at the same hour, to begin to discourse sweet music on either side of the river. A large crowd of the soldiers of both armies gathered to listen to the music, the friendly pickets not interfering, and soon the bands began to answer each other. First the band on the northern bank would play "Star Spangled Banner," "Hail Columbia," or some other national air, and at its conclusion the "boys in blue" would cheer most lustily. And then the band on the southern side would respond with "Dixie," or "Bonnie Blue Flag," or some other Southern melody, and the "boys in gray" would attest their approbation with an "old Confederate yell." But presently one of the bands struck up in sweet and plaintive notes, which were waited across the Rappahannock and caught up at once by the other band and swelled into a grand anthem which touched every heart, "Home, Sweet Home!" At the conclusion of this piece there went up a simultaneous shout from both sides of the river. Cheer followed cheer, and those hills, which had so recently resounded with hostile guns, echoed and re-echoed the glad acclaim. A chord had been struck responsive to which the hearts of enemies—enemies then—could beat in unison; and on both sides of the river "Something told the soldier's cheek Washed of the stains of powder."

It was a warm afternoon, and young Mr. Cummagid did not go into the house, but sat down on the porch, as was his custom, after ringing the bell. Her little sister came to the door and looked at him with some curiosity. "Does your sister Mabel know I am here, Nellie?" he asked. "Oh yes," replied the innocent prattler, "I guess she does; she told me to come out and see how shady it made the front yard when you put your feet on the porch railing."

Garfield vs. Plinatore.

When I was a lad, and not very tall, I served a time on the "ragging canvas." I was kept as busy as a shuttle in a loom. A scrubbing of the deck with a big corn broom I scrubbed off the deck so carefully. I'll soon be the enter of this great country. —Chicago Free Press.

THE YAZOO PLAN.

Southern Style in Campaign Meetings. WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—J. H. Randall, a greentack campaign orator, has written a letter just received here relating to his experiences in Alabama. He went to Klier Hill to a barbecue and joint discussion between the Democrats and greentackers. He got the worst of it. He says of the first democratic orator that in the course of his speech he said that the confederacy still exists and has many friends, and that Jeff Davis, the best friend we ever had, is yet our president and devoted to our interests, and if Hancock is elected, and we have no doubt he will be, you will be paid for all the property you have lost through radical rule, and you must stand by the great democratic party, for the solid south will now give us entire control of the general government. When the greentackers spoke they got us, earnest attention until one and another denounced the "damned Yankees" and warned them to shut up, and the meeting was broken up and the greentackers warned to leave.

Randall also relates his experience at Shubuta, a town of Clarke county, Miss., near the Alabama line. When he appeared to address the audience, he was greeted as follows: "There's a greentacker, — him!" "Three cheers for Hancock; — him!" "Yankee greentackers. He ought to be killed, —!" "Let's give him —," and other phrases of like character. A well dressed young man, perfectly sober, separated from the throng and approaching him, delivered a note written on a leaf from his pocket book: "Dear sir—We will give you and your 'pard' just 35 minutes to pick up your duds and get out of town as lively as you can heel it. Yours to death, Boys of Shubuta." Randall replied, "Do you mean to tell me, an American, law-abiding citizen, attending strictly to business, that I cannot stay in this town?" "Take the first train of cars, young man," was the reply of the Mississippi bulldozer. "We know you and you can't stay here. You must go to the next station." Randall demanded, "Who gives the order?" and was answered by the bulldozers, "The boys of Shubuta. Your time is passing. You had better be getting along or you will catch —!" Randall understood this to indicate that they did not desire that he should expound any greentack theories in that neighborhood.

There are 9,000,000 kilograms of glycerine made in Europe every year.

Of this quantity France produces nearly half, or 4,000,000 kilograms, and England contributes only 300,000 kilograms. This country, the United States, however, puts the best and purest glycerine on the market.

Perhaps the following conclusion of M. Montigny in a paper published in Les Moudes may prove of value in predicting the weather: He holds that very pronounced twinkling of the stars indicates either commotion in the upper regions of the atmosphere or a sudden fall of temperature there, thus denoting the conditions of an early appearance of bad weather.

Infallible Indian Remedies. A Sure Shot For FEVER & AGUE.

DURING A LONG RESIDENCE AMONG the Indian tribes of the coast and the interior, I have had the good fortune to discover, from the "Medicine" men of the several tribes, and from other sources, a number of remedies for diseases incident to this country, consisting of roots, herbs and bark, and having been solicited by many people of this valley, who have tried and proved the efficacy of them in disease, to procure and offer the same for sale, I take this means of announcing to all that, during the past season, I have made an extended tour through the mountains and valleys, and have secured certain of these remedies which are a sure cure for

Fever and Ague. Those suffering from Ague who desire to be cured, can leave orders at Mr. Strong's store on First Street, where I will furnish the remedies, guaranteeing a radical cure or I will demand no pay. W. W. JOHNSON, Remoines done up in 41 packages. 15-1
