My Little Wife.

Mattie had a fiery temper, but that that was her worst fault. When she married Harsh Hunter per ple said:

"She'll make his life a warm business for him."

But Mattie thought differently. "I will show them what a triumph of love I will work. I'll teach them I'm not the vixen I seem."

And so she married him. The wed. ding was a very pleasant affair -something to look back to as long as they lived. Mattie looked very sweet in her new white swiss. Her long, pretty carls trembled and shown in the brilliant light, her eyes sparkled like twin stars, and her soft cheeks were mantled in softer blushes as she leaned trustingly on the strong arm of the stalwart man who was to be her guide and guard through life.

The honeymoon was rich with the pleasures of new married lite to the humble pair; but the time soon came when the bride must leave the old rooftree for the untried realities of a home ot her own. This was the first sorrow -the trial of leaving home and mother -but it was fleeting, for in, the excitement of the "setting up" housekleping in the white cottage on 'Squire Blackburn's farm, the little sorrow was

It was very funny, and Marsh laughed and Mattie laughed, when just they two sat down to the little new table and ate the viands prepared by Mattie's

Everything was new and strangely sweet. Everything went on nicely, and Mastie was triumphant. But all things earthly must change. The weather grew warm and the kitchen hot, and one of the hottest days of the season Mattie had the headache, and the supper must be ready at 5 o'clock. Mattie tried hard to get it ready, but burned her wrist; then she burned the bread. Then she looked at the clock, and saw that it had stopped, and looking out at the door she saw Marsh,

"Is supper ready!" he asked, and she blustered out something and they had their first quarrel.

Ob, dear me, the first quarrel. How sorry it made the poor little woman.

But Marsh looked sullen, a:d went off without kassing her. They never talked that quarrel over, simply because they were both too groud to breach the subject. After that quarrels came oftener and easier. They did not mean to quarrel, but somehow angry words would come up.

After awhile a littly boy came to their household, and it seemed for a month or two a good deal like the wellremembered honeymoon, but Mattie's wretched temper would fly to pieces again, and the happiness was spoiled.

"It's carious we can't get along without so much quarreling," said Marsh one winter day.

Mattie telt the tears in her eyes in moment, and her heart soltened towards Marsh, and she was about to confess her failings and ask forgiveness, when he continued:

"It's all your bateful temper, Mattie -you know it is."

That was enough, and what was meant to be a reconciliation was simply another quarrel.

"Oh, dear me; it's my wretched temper-I know it is," sobbed Mattie, after Marsh went out, "but he needn't have said so."

"It I only wasn't so Blunt," said

Marsh to himself, with a sigh. So things went from bad to worse Little mistakes are imagined into terrible wrongs.

The neighbors had their fill of gossip about the matter, and finally one day when March was away Mattie thought she thing over.

"I am a wretched little puisance," she said mentally; "I don't know why I am so, either, but I cannot help it," she said, dispairingly, her eyes filled with tears, "I've a great mund to take Neddie and go home, and stay there. My shams couldn't be any greater than it is."

She clasped the baby close in her arms, and her tears fell fast on his curly fler heart seemed bursting within her but she wrapped the child in her shawl, and with a quickening pace she fled the place and hurried across the enowcover. ed fields to her mother's,"

"What's the matter, child?" asked her mother, as Mattie, pale and shivering, appeared at the door.

"Don't ask me, mother," sobbed the wretched little woman.

"You ain't left home?" "Yes, mother, forever."

"Don't say that to me. You shall go back this instant," said her mother, thinking of the scandal that was sure to follow such a proceeding by her miserable dangliter.

"Oh, don't, mother!" and Mattie looked the picture of dispair. "Tell me about it, my child," said the mother, melted into tenderness by the look. Then Mattie, through her tears, told her mother all, and ended with these "But, oh, mother, I do love him, the father of my child-I love him, but he doesn't understand me!" and she fell sobbing beside her mother's knee. "Let me advise you, my child," said the mother, softly stroking her daughter's glossy hair. "I've passed through it all, and I'll tell you a secret. There is almost certain to be mistakes come up between husband and wife, and often words are spoken that are regretted a moment afterwards. But, my child, such a word can do no harm if rerented of and a confession made. It you have said anything to wound your husband's feelings, no matter what he may have said to you, go and tell him you are sorry, and I know that he will not only forgive you, but beg you to forgive him The hour that follows will be more delightful than the hour of your wedding. Let me tell you a little instance in my own life."

And her mother told of one of those little family differences that come up between so many worthy couples. The story ended so pleasantly that it southed the temper in the breast of the heartsick daughter.

After the story was done Mattie still kneeled, resting her tired head on her mother's knee. Her mother stroked her glossy hair in silence for a quarter of an hour, but Mattie's thaught's were busy. Suddenly she arose, took her child into her arms and wrapped it close in her shawl, she prepared to go. "Where are you going, my child?"

asked her mother. To make my confession," answered Mattie through her tears.

"Heaven bless you," said her mother. When Marsh Hunt came home that night a pretty sight met his view. The fire was burning brightly on the hearth and before it stood Yattie, dressed in a neat calico wrapper, with snowy collar and cuffs, and a scarlet bow of ribbon at her throat. Baby sat on his pallet before the fire, crowing lustily, and beating the floor with a tin rattle.

Supper was on the table, and the tea was steaming on the hearth. Marsh was cold, but such a scene warmed him-He went straight to the pallet and commenced a romp with the baby. Mattie went and knelt there too, determined to make a confession, but she did not know how to commence. It was easy to think of beforehand, but when the time came she was lost. There was an awkward pause, then both spoke at

"Mattie, I've been-"

"Marsh, I'm sorry-"

Their eyes, met and each saw the tenderpess in those of the other; all was now told in an mstant. Both made their confession.

Marsh opened his arms and Mattie fell sobbing on his breast, while baby looked on in amazement. From that hour they were the happiest of couples.

The Dome of the Invalides

One of the most striking objects seen upon approaching Paris is the dome of the Hotel des Invalides, which glows in the sunshine like a ball of gold. During Napoleon's reign, when it was reported to him that an ominous discontent prevailed among the Parisians. "Go," said the Emperor, "and gild the dome of the Invalides." It was done, and the people forgot the tyranny of the Government in their admiration of the new wonder. The gilded dome is a monument to Napoleon's knowledge of French character.

Among the amusements in preparation for those wintering in Algiers this season is a grand lion hunt, under the direction of the celebrated Bombonnel, and the only fear of the affair proving a fiasco is the dearth of lion sin Algeria. So scarce have liens become throughout Algeris that a company was lately formed at Bone for the purpose of lion Infallible Indian Remedies. A Sure Shot For FEVER & AGUE.

DURING A LONG RESIDENCE AMONG the Indian tribes of the coast and the interior, I have had the good fortune to discover, from the "Medicine" men of the several tribes, and from other sources, a number of remedies for diseases incident to this country, consisting of roots, herbs and bark, and having been solicited by many people of this valley, who have tried and proved the efficacy of them in disease, to procure and offer the same for sale, I take this means of announcing to all that, during the past season. I have made an extended tour through the mountains and valleys, and have secured certain of these remedies which are a sure cure for
