Lectures by Rev. R. H. Paulson

Early Oregon Ventures—Their Influence on Americans.

New first heard the two words that rose from his lips, on the night before he pursued on his path from the Gorge to Oregon. In Oregon, he was left behind by the wagon train with his family. As he watched the wagons go, he thought of the Northern States, where he had left his home, his family, and his friends. He knew he would never again see them.

Mr. Lee and the American Mission, were not willing to help the families that had come with them. They were left alone and had to depend on themselves. Mr. Lee decided to go back to the wagon train and get the children back.

He

managed to get through the difficulties and finally reached the wagon train.
