STEAK RIGHTS DEMOCRAT.

LETTERS BY REV. R. H. SPALDING.

State Geographer's Office, Thirty-fourth Street. November 18, 1866.

[Debates by Reverend R. H. Spalding re: the State Geographer's Office.]

Inward Journeys.

The writer was too late in reaching the depot to take the train that left the station at nine o'clock, when he arrived. The last train of the day was already in motion, and the last car of the train was about to leave. He had just time to get into the train and to take his seat, and was just in time to see the last car of the train leave. He had just time to get into the train and to take his seat, and was just in time to see the last car of the train leave. He had just time to get into the train and to take his seat, and was just in time to see the last car of the train leave.

A recent debate by the Reverend R. H. Spalding re: the State Geographer's Office. The debates are interesting and instructive, and will be found in the next number of the State Rights Democrat.

Practical Jokes.

Two years ago a celebrated French author published a novel which was received with universal applause. The author was then at the height of his powers, and his works were highly esteemed by all who read them. He was then at the height of his powers, and his works were highly esteemed by all who read them. He was then at the height of his powers, and his works were highly esteemed by all who read them.

Effect of Imagination.

The author of the novel was a man of great imagination, and his works were highly esteemed by all who read them. He was then at the height of his powers, and his works were highly esteemed by all who read them. He was then at the height of his powers, and his works were highly esteemed by all who read them.
