the last, it is the most excursionary and most uncertain. It is the least reliable source of information, for the news of day is only what is reported to us by the newspapers and periodicals, which are often at fault, and which, while they contain the truth, are often misrepresented, and so far from being trustworthy, are often entirely untrustworthy. They are often false, and of their own accord, and the more some newspaper is, the more likely they are to be false. And yet, it is their accusation which is the most relied on, and the most trusted, and the most ap-priated. They are the most trusted, because they are the most reported, and the most reported, because they are the most trusted. It is their report which is the most relied on, and the most relied on, because it is the most trustworthy, and the most trustworthy because it is the most reported, and the most reported, because it is the most trusted. It is their report which is the most relied on, and the most relied on, because it is the most trusted, and the most trusted because it is the most reported, and the most reported, because it is the most trusted. And so on ad infinitum.
