The Democrat.

SATURDAY.....AUGUST 7, 1869.

A WOMAN HATER.

An advertisement appeared in a daily paper for a milliner and shop-girl, at a Madame Lavalle's, No. 121 Pearl street.

A pair of slender hands turned the paper over, a pair of brown eyes wandered up and down the long column of "Wants," until they rested upon this.

"The very place, mamma," said Viola Burnett. And forthwith the little hat and neat mantle were donned, and soon she was walking in the direction of Pearl street.

"I dare say that there have been many before me," she thought. "But, surely, there is no harm in trying, when mamma and I need money so much; and its coming all depends upon me."

It did not take long to bring her to No. 121 Pearl street, and she paused before the glass door to collect herself. There was but one lady within, and she felt much relieved, for she expected to see a crowd of eager applicants, among whom her chance would be but slight; and, to find it all quiet, and no one to face except the aforesaid lady engaged in looking over some boxes in the rear, was a pleasure unexpected.

She entered and the lady came forward. She was not very young, perhaps thirty, with a pretty, kindly face; and when Viola made known her errand, she gave a little laugh, and said, "Dear me! I am delighted! Such a string of applicants as I have had, and all of them sour-looking old maids. We should not have five customers in a week. Are you experienced?"

"Yes; I have worked for a year in the establishment of Mrs. Latouche."

"Ah! her name is well known and her work much admired. I am sure you will suit me. When will you begin?"

"Now, if you wish; I am anxious to begin as soon as you can find work for me."

"Do begin at once; and, to give us a specimen of your work, take this hat, and trim it. You must know, my dear Miss."—

"Burnett."

"Ah, yes, Miss Burnett, that I have a brother, who is, in fact, the owner of this establishment, and it is to him that you must look for directions; for to tell the truth, I am soon to be married!"

Viola nodded, and allowed the Frenchwoman to go on.

"I am a widow, and have lived two long years in a state of single wretchedness, and have now resolved to again marry. This fact, you must understand, brings you directly under the attention of M. Paul Lavalle, who, by the way, I must inform you, is a thorough woman-hater."

"Is he old?" asked Viola.

"No, he is young; but he so utterly despises women that I verily believe he would discharge you were you to ask a question beyond your business. He is polite, for all that, and may offer you the attention due to a lady; but I beg you to refuse every offer; for if you do not, you will not long remain here."

The request was a strange one, but, nevertheless, easily granted; and she promised to do all within her power to retain her situation.

It was late in the afternoon before the gentleman arrived, and Viola only caught a glimpse of a tall handsome man; then bent her eyes resolutely upon her work.

"My brother, Miss Burnett!"

Miss Burnett raised her beautiful eyes for a moment, and then went on with her work.

"Do you fancy this work, Miss Burnett?" he asked.

"Yes, sir."

"I am glad, for Adele is hard to please. Do you think you will be content to remain?"

"Yes, sir."

The gentleman turned away, evidently thinking it useless to try to engage her in conversation, and she went soberly on with her work.

It rained when the hour came for Viola's return home, and she stood a moment at the door, looking out in the dark, wet streets.

"Miss Burnett," said Mr. Lavalle, "allow me to see you home under my umbrella."

Viola was surprised. Not only because he was a rich man and she a poor milliner, and she wondered at his offer.

"No, thank you," she replied; "I can go alone."

He had not time to repeat the offer before she was out and half way down the street.

It was darker than she had supposed, and the rain fell in torrents; but she drew her mantle tightly around her, and with bowed head walked swiftly along. Before she reached the end of the street there came a sound of sharp, quick steps upon the pavement, and Paul Lavalle came up beside her.

"Of course you think me very bold, but I prefer to run the risk of incurring your displeasure rather than see you endanger your health by exposing yourself on such a night as this."

He drew her hand within his arm, and together they went to Mrs. Burnett's door. Viola allowed him to carry on the conversation, answering only when directly questioned, and then in monosylables. She could not help thinking, however, what a pleasant, agreeable gentleman he was, and half repented her promise to madame; but she managed to keep it, and bade him a formal good night, with a cool little speech of thanks for his kindness.

She had no desire to lose her situation, but she was almost inclined to disbelieve madame's story. Well, it might be true; and if so, woman haters were certainly agreeable creatures.

The work became a pleasure since daily the establishment was brightened with the owner's presence; but Viola never forgot madame's warning. It was all in vain that he brought fruits and flowers, and praised her work. She never lifted her dark eyes at his pleasantries, and once when he chanced to clasp her white hands in the midst of a confused tangle of ribbons, she never spoke or smiled; and he would not have known that she observed the action, but for the dash of blood which swept across her round cheeks.

There were many more rainy nights, and many times the umbrella was brought forth; and under its cover Viola trudged home beside Paul Lavalle. She thought him a strange man, and felt that madame had never clearly understood him. He seemed very unlike her notion of a woman hater.

One day he dropped a note into her lap, saying: "Here is a letter for you, Miss Burnett. You will send a reply before I come again," and went away leaving her to stare wonderfully at the little note.

After a while she opened it and read:

"VIOLA: You are a strange being—I cannot understand you; but I understand my own heart, and it bids me say I love you. Will you give me that blessed right to call you my wife? I told you I must know your reply before I again come, and so must it be. Viola, my darling, I await your answer.

"PAUL LAVALLE."

A joyous light broke over her face, and with a flood of happy tears, Viola wrote beneath, "I will be your wife."

"Why are you so bright, Viola?" asked madame, who had entered.

"Your brother, madame has asked me to be his wife."

"And you told him—"

"Yes."

"My sweet Viola! I knew my plan would succeed. I had worked for months to bring the change in Paul's fortunes, but had been thus far unsuccessful. He declared that all women were husband hunters, and that he would never marry one of them. I knew in an instant that you would please him, and so I trumped up the whole story. You will wonder at my anxiety, but will cease to do so when I tell you that I cannot marry until he is settled in life. Bless your heart, I am delighted."

Paul came in less than an hour, and told her the same story; and together they walked to Viola's mother, and she joined in their happiness. If he ever was a woman hater, he laid it a side when he married, and became a model husband.

They have a County Judge out in Josephine County, who, in passing upon the late act amending the act regulating the salaries of County Judges—and which said amending act, reduced his own salary to $300—"decided that the entire batch of laws passed by the last Legislature, in the whole, and in all its parts, is unconstitutional, null and void, and of no effect and validity whatever; and especially, is the act which reduces his salary a void act—a delusion and a snare to the unwary." The News burlesques him admirably.

Pure blood is essential to sound health and long life. No chronic disease, sores, ulcers, skin eruptions, glandulous swellings, discharges from the ear, sore eyes, sores or cankers in the mouth, will never appear if the blood is pure. To secure this great desideratum, take Dr. Walker's VEGETABLE VINEGAR BITTERS. It is the great Blood Purifier, and life-giving principle, increasing the power of digestion, and exciting the absorbants into healthy action, whereby all impurities of the system are carried off.

It is said when a Russian husband neglects to beat his wife for a month or two, she begins to get alarmed at his indifference.

"I know every rock on the coast," said an Irish pilot. And that moment the ship struck, when he exclaimed, "And that's one of them!"

"GAY" NEWS!

FARMERS CAN RIDE AND PLOW!

—BY SECURING ONE OF THE—

"GAY" PLOWS!

Manufactured and sold for the very

LOW PRICES OF $65 AND $75!

The simplicity and practicability of this new Plow commends it favorably to the special notice of every farmer. It possesses a decided superiority over all other Plows now in use. The wheels are four feet in diameter and run on the unplowed land. Its entire construction is in no way complicated. The Plow is managed in every manner with ease, and requires only two levers to be used in making any alteration. The superiority of the "Gay" Plow will be clearly shown by the following certificate:

We the undersigned, citizens of Linn county, Oregon, having purchased and used upon our farms the "GAY" PLOW, hereby certify that the same has given us entire satisfaction. Its facility for adjusting to suit the depth of the furrow without moving from the seat, is simple and easy.—We like the Plow for its draught because the same is brought to bear directly upon the Plow beam instead of the carriage; also because it is strong and durable, all except the wood work being constructed of wrought iron; no castings are used. The wheels running upon the solid land is an advantage over other Gang Plows in striking off lands and in Plowing, not having to make the necessary changes in the machinery; and the seat is always level, not throwing the driver forward or sideways as in other Plows. Better work and more of it can be accomplished by the use of this Plow than by hand.

We take pleasure in recommending the "GAY" PLOW to our brother farmers as one having no superior in Oregon.
