Her name it appears was Alice Blanche Oswald, and she was within a few days of her twentieth year. At the inquest last night before Mr. Laugham, the following letter was put in and read;

A WRETCHED WEDDING NIGHT. The following sensational narrative appeared in a French newspaper of the 5th ultimo: "M. Guillaume was, two days ago, married to a young and pretty woman, with whom he was deeply in love. In the evening, after a modest wedding repast, the newly married couple retired to their domicile in Rue Monge, when happy to to find themselves alone, they talked together until a late hour of the past and of the future which seemed to smile upon them. While conversing, their lamp went out, and the young couple went to sleep without relighting it. They were suddenly awakened by a noise at the door just as daylight was commencing and they then saw an unknown individual advancing in a threatening attitude toward their bed. 'I knew it,' he cried in a terrible voice, drawing a dagger from his pocket, the stranger commenced an onslaught on the pair. A desperate struggle ensued, the consequences of which might have been fatal but for the interference of other lodgers in the house, who were alarmed by the disturbance. M. Gillsume was discovered lying on the floor, pierced with seven wounds, two of which were serious, while his wife lay by his side, also in a state of insensibility, though fortunately unhurt .-The bride and bridegroom, it was discovered subsequently, had been the victims of a most unfortunate mistake. M. C-, a lodger in the house, who occupied an apartment similar to that of M. Guillaume, but situated in the story above, had made r mistake in coming home, and
