The sober second thought leads the more considerate of Gen. Hartvanft's friends in this city to regard the action of the Harrisburg Convention, in formally presenting Gover-nor Hartranft as the elect of Pennsylvania for President in 1876, as premature and of doubtful propriety. That act, they believe, makes Gov. Hartranft a public man whose every past, present and future official act will be closely scrutinized. One of his most circumspect friends re-marked to me that: To blindly serve the politicians who surround him is to discount himself before the nation for life and property and the military he seeks to serve; while to refuse rule that will maintain order in the pardon to the Russell's of political South will make Grant again Presiociety is to vex beyond the limit of forbearance, the party managers upon whose favor he is dependent.

The army, in fact, is depended upon to manage them in every emergency, and it alone stands be-tween the frontier and the settlers and devastation and death. whenever the Indians have enough of war they surrender and make their own terms. They demand the protection of peace commissioners and agents, and live on the rations and the bounty of the Government.
