Grass cut a week after it is out of blossom, will produce hay that contains about forty pounds in a hundred available for food; the fatty matter will be pale, making light-colored butter. It will take a cow six hours to digest a meal of such hay. Early cut hay, on the other hand, will contain about fifty-five pounds of food material in every 100, which will be had in better proportion and better color, and will require but four hours for tation, and, therefore, is of a colder nature than horse dung. The slowness of fermentation of cow dung and night.

PRESCRIPTIONS will receive immediate and careful attention, at all, hours, day and night. must be ascribed—first to the large amount of water which it contains; second, to the small amount of nitrogen contained in the organic portions of this dung; and third, to the physical condition of these matters for, in drying, cow dung does not crumble dewn like horse dung, but adheres together, forming a cheesey mass, into which the air does not penetrate distributed over the land as horse dung. The setion of cow dung on station is slower but more lasting Interest Allowed on Time Deposits in Coin. than that of horse manure.

The officers of the "Home Mutual beg leave to congratulate its patrons, stock-holders, and agents, upon the showing which they are able to make of its business for the contennial year just closed. This result has been produced by a careful weeding out of extra hazardous risks, and insisting upon and obtaining fair rates for overy risk written.

We cannestly request our agents every where to continue this course, avoiding extra hazards, carefully selecting their isusinees, studying and knowing the men they insure for, carefully avoiding overinsurance and scattering their risks, so that no great disaster or loss can happen. Give its your carnest and faithful service, and we will, in the present year, exceed the results of the Centennial.

Our Company has been ir existance since 1864—has met and promptly paid every loss it has incurred, and is to-day stronger in its financial condition and the confidence of the insuring public than ever.
