more than the expenditure for the last five years of the administration of his predecessor, while as a matter of fact the actual cost per capita of keeping the convicts was less under Grover than under his predecessor, the difference in the aggregate expenses being due to the increased number of convicts to be kept. Thus the total number of convicts at the close of Grover's term was less than 50. They now number 140. The same statement applies to the cost of keeping the insane. The cost per each patient of keeping the insane was much less under Grover's administration than formerly, but the increase in the number kept made the aggregate expenditure on that account much larger under Grover than under his predecessors. These illustrations might be extended, but it is unnecessary. JUSTICE.
