THE DeLONG TRAGEDY.

Story of the Finding of Lieut. DeLong and Comrades in the Snows of Siberia.

New York, June 20.—A Herald London special of to-day says: W. H. Gilder, the Herald correspondent with the Rogers, sends the following dispatch:

LENA DELVA, April 12, 1882. Melville found the bodies of DeLong's parties March 23rd. They were in two places 500 and 1000 yards from the wreck of the scow. Melville's search party first started from the supply depot to follow Niderman's route from Usterday to Malvig, and afterwards from Malvig back to places Usterday. They stopped at a place which Niderman and Noros passed the first day after they left DeLong, being sure that the others had not got much further. There they found the wreck, and following the junk came upon a rifle barrel hung upon four sticks. They set natives digging on the east side of the sticks, and soon came upon two bodies under eight feet of snow. While these men were digging inwards the east, Melville went along the bank twenty feet above the river to find a place to take bearings. He then saw a camp kettle and the remains of a fire about a thousand yards from the tent, and approaching nearly to it stumbled on DeLong's hands sticking out of the snow about thirty feet from the edge of the bank. Here, under about four feet of snow, they found the bodies of DeLong and Ambler, about three feet apart, and all lying on their feet, all partially covered by pieces of blanket and the other things which they had taken with them. It looked as if, when dying, they had crawled into the fire. Boyd was lying under the fire, his clothing being burned through to the skin, which was not burned. Boyd's face was covered with dirt. All the bodies were carried to the top of a hill three hundred feet high, about forty yards to the southwest from where they were found, and there interred in a mound constructed of wood from the scow. The mound was covered with stones and is to be seen in the spring. A cross is inscribed with the record and name of the dead cut in by the search party. After completing the tomb, the party separated to search the delta for traces of Chippis people. Melville was to go to the northwest part of the delta, and west as far as Olenik river. Niderman took the center and Bartlett the northeast. Niderman and Bartlett found nothing, and Melville has not yet returned.

WASHINGTON, June 22.—There is a pretty row between members of the house committee and Representative Van Voorhees of New York, that may lead to something of a scene when the subject is brought to the attention of the house. Van Voorhees is charged with having struck from the bill to regulate immigration that passed the house under suspension of rules on Monday, certain amendments agreed to by the committee, and which it supposed were contained in the bill. The committee this morning decided to ask the house to recall the bill from the senate, and a resolution was offered by the original author of the bill, and he assumed to demand that the committee should have changed it in any particular. One feature of the bill as originally introduced, gave power to state charitable institutions to use the proceeds of the head tax on emigrants, which steamships are expected to pay, and criminals arriving here from foreign countries. It was the judgment of the committee that paupers should be detained and sent back directly upon their arrival, and that it would not be wise to have aliens engaged in all states hunting up antecedents of paupers and sending them back to the countries from which they came at the government expense. The bill was accordingly amended in the particular, and Van Voorhees was allowed to inspect the amended bill. It remained in his possession four days. He deliberately erased certain of the committee's amendments and gave it to Reagan of Texas, who removed the passage without investigation of his contents. Van Voorhees says he consulted members of the committee before making the changes, but the committee had a meeting to-day, and expressions of severe censure of Van Voorhees' action were uttered. The subject will be brought to the attention of the house.

EXERCISE. Give your brain sufficient food and an abundant supply of oxygen, and you will find it a fair amount of good hard work every day if you wish to maintain it in a high state of healthy activity. Barristers and clergymen, who use their brains much, are the longest-lived men in the country, showing plainly that regular brain work is good for the general health as well as for the efficiency of the nervous system in particular. For the muscular system must be treated in a similar manner if you do not wish it to become subject to fatty degeneration. An unused muscle shrinks and becomes soft and flabby, presenting an appearance of marked contrast to the brawny arm of the blacksmith. Instances of the feebleness of tissues thus preserved frequently present themselves to the notice of the surgeon. A muscle is called upon to perform a vigorous contraction, but snaps in the effort. The heart itself is sometimes torn asunder in attempting to send an extra supply of blood to some needy locality. No man can afford to lower his general vitality for the sake of mere idle gratification. He never knows when he may require all the energy which can be bestowed away. A railway accident, a runaway horse, a run to catch a train, a fall on the ice, or even a fit of coughing, may bring a life of misery or an early death to one who would have passed unscathed through them all had he allowed his nerves and muscles to wear away in vigorous activity.

RATS AT SEA. Rats greatly infest ships, and are by them conveyed to every part of the world. So industriously do they make homes for themselves in the numerous crannies and corners in the hull of the ship, that it is impossible to get rid of them. Ships take out rats as well as passengers and cargo every voyage; whether the former remain in the ship or not is best known to themselves. When the East India Company had ships of their own they employed a rat catcher, who sometimes captured 500 rats in one ship just returned from Calcutta. The ship rat is often the black species. Sometimes black and brown inhabit the same vessel, and unless they carry on perpetual hostilities the one party will keep in the head of the vessel and the other to the stern. The ship rat is very anxious that his supply of fresh water shall not fail; he will come on deck when it rains, and climb up to the wet sails to suck them. Sometimes he mistakes a sprit cask for a water cask, and he gets drunk. A captain on an American ship is credited (or discredited) with an ingenious bit of sharp practice as a means of clearing his ship from rats. Having discharged a cargo at a port in Holland, he found his ship in juxtaposition to another which had just taken in a cargo of Dutch cheese. He laid a plank at night from one vessel to another; the rats, tempted by the odor, trooped along the plank and began to feast. He took care that the plank should not be there to serve them as a pathway back again, and so the cheese-laden ship had a cruel addition to its outward cargo.

It was in 1754 admitted by Franklin, and in 1767 argued by French diplomatists, that the American colonies, brought together from all nations of the civilized world, were as little likely to unite among themselves as to remain united with England.

"I'm not going to school again," said a little four-year-old boy to his mother on his return, after his day at the kindergarten. "Why, my dear! Don't you like to see the little boys and girls?" "Yes; but I don't want to go," persisted the boy, "cause my teacher says that to-morrow she's going to try to put an idea into my head."
