

HOME AND ABROAD. Nolan's Cash Store.

Dr Gray is building an addition to his barn.

We are told that a friend at Peoria is soon to build a fine residence.

Remember those Coupe Jovin gloves a Miss Leavitt's.

The State Grange meets on the 4th Tuesday in May.

The H. E. Co have begun drilling for the contest at Salem.

One dollar unlaundried shirts, 65 cents at Nolan's Cash Store.

Table linens, towels and napkins, cheap at Nolan's Cash Store.

Saller and sun-down hats at 40 to 75 cents each at Miss Leavitt's.

A thirty foot piece of spruce for a ladder is not to be found in the valley.

Cabbage, cauliflower and tomato plants in quantities to suit at Redfield's.

Dr E. G. Johnson furnishes his patrons medicine without extra expense.

Will Bros. can furnish you a fishing outfit, from 20 cents to $25, outfit.

A box of some pens at this office, quill acting with fountain qualities for $1.50.

New line of Standard white and colored shirts just opened at Nolan's Cash Store.

The finest hats and bonnets to suit all shades and complexions at Miss Leavitt's.

30,000 cabbage and tomato plants for sale by J. H. Townsend one mile south of Albany.

There are about 75 newspapers published in Oregon, being one to every 2,500 of population.

antillas, dolmans and walking jackets, the finest selection in the city, at Monteth & Seitenbach's.

Farmers and others desiring a general, lucrative agency business, by which $5 to $20 a day can be earned, send address at once, on postal, I. C. Wilkinson & Co., 107 Fulton street, New York.

In Foshy & Mason's is a large picture, neatly framed, of the late graduating class in the Medical department of Willamette University. They are a good looking set of young men, and lady.

We are told that a friend at Peoria is soon to build a fine residence, on the site of a residence destroyed by fire last evening. It is to be a two story affair, and will be a fine specimen of the modern style.

Remember those Coupe Jovin gloves a Miss Leavitt's.

The State Grange meets on the 4th Tuesday in May.

The H. E. Co have begun drilling for the contest at Salem.

One dollar unlaundried shirts, 65 cents at Nolan's Cash Store.

Table linens, towels and napkins, cheap at Nolan's Cash Store.

Saller and sun-down hats at 40 to 75 cents each at Miss Leavitt's.

A thirty foot piece of spruce for a ladder is not to be found in the valley.

Cabbage, cauliflower and tomato plants in quantities to suit at Redfield's.

Dr E. G. Johnson furnishes his patrons medicine without extra expense.

Will Bros. can furnish you a fishing outfit, from 20 cents to $25, outfit.

A box of some pens at this office, quill acting with fountain qualities for $1.50.

New line of Standard white and colored shirts just opened at Nolan's Cash Store.

The finest hats and bonnets to suit all shades and complexions at Miss Leavitt's.

30,000 cabbage and tomato plants for sale by J. H. Townsend one mile south of Albany.

There are about 75 newspapers published in Oregon, being one to every 2,500 of population.

antillas, dolmans and walking jackets, the finest selection in the city, at Monteth & Seitenbach's.

work will be pushed so as to be finished this year. This will take from Corvallis the proud distinction of being the terminus of a road.

Chas H and Orilla Reed expose spiritualists in this city to-morrow evening. Everybody should go as Mr and Mrs Reed have a good reputation. See article in another column.

Last Monday a young man in this city attempted to ride a pony so well that over the raising of an umbrella could not be the means of dismounting him; but the pony changed his course so quickly as to throw his rider to the ground. This is about the first time on record when an umbrella came out ahead.

Dude is the latest. We have seen had Shakespeare and Webster but can find no definition to it, so it must be a coined institution. As near as we can ascertain from private sources it means a young man who hangs around the theater or church door, or according to other venians a man who sponges his riding.

We acknowledge the receipt of a ticket to a concert and hall to be given by the L. O. P. of Portland, on last evening. The entertainment was to take place at the Mechanic's Pavilion, and already at least accounts, 1,200 tickets at $1 each, had been sold. The funds were to be for the fund for the Orphan's Home.

The Oregonian of Wednesday has a sensational item about the wheat lands near Halcyon being covered with grass, and suggests that there could be more money made harvesting than from the wheat. While it is true that there are some grasses on the prairie it is not true that they are as thick as represented, and that they will grow in the valley.

About seventy-five papers are now published in the State of Oregon, which, estimating the population at 225,000, is one for every 3,000 inhabitants. The total number published in the United States is about 12,000 being one for about 4,500 inhabitants, New York, with her five million inhabitants, has about one paper to each 3,500.

The play of "Head on the Waters" is being rehearsed by an amateur company in this city, and will be presented in Y P C A Hall in a short time, the time will be announced next week. The play is an interesting drama, full of life, and will no doubt draw a large house.

A Chinaman in Portland was arrested for carrying baskets on the sidewalk. The Chinaman asked that the case be dismissed on the ground that he carried the baskets on a pole instead of on a sidewalk. He was fined $10.

Even the Chinese are appreciating the value of printer's ink, as may be ascertained by reference to our advertising columns. While the chinaman wants his work done cheap there is considerable satisfaction in the fact that he is sure pay.

Flows are being pushed with vigor. When our young friends in the country get through with turning the soil for this Spring, they should come to the city and call on L. E. Blain, and see the latest styles of Spring suits, and they will be sure to buy.

A new skating rink has been established in the basement of Sanders & Sternberg's store, between the pair of skates having been purchased. The floor is a good one, so that it will no doubt make a good rink.

There is plenty of room for immigrants in Linn County. If instead of migrating their farms farmers would sell part of their land it would be money in their pockets. Nearly all the large farms should be cut in two, and thoroughly cultivated.

The distinguished temperance lecturer, Miss Francis E. Willard, will arrive in Portland in a short time. While in the Northwest she will visit Albany, when preparations will be made to give her a big reception. She is said to be a fine speaker.

Some of the best made and most stylish carriages seen on our streets are from the shop of Mr. Fred Willard, of this city. He has obtained a good reputation, and people go to him from all over this part of the state, which speaks well for him.

People this side of Oregon City are getting anxious about that fish ladder which is to be built there by an act of the last legislature. Mr. Baldwin of Corvallis was given the contract to do the work and perhaps he can furnish the necessary information.

Fremont and the friends of Fremont should be made arrangements to attend the social to be given at the Linn County Club at No. 27 Hall on the evening of May 15th. Let their local social about a year ago, although for their benefit, there was hardly a friend present. Let them turn over a leaf this year.

The Dalles has organized a Ladies Band, and is thus placed on a footing with Albany. The instruments used are silver, but it becomes as proficient as the members of the ladies band of this city, will be anything but lively.

Mr. Henry Villard passed through the city the first of the week, but for some reason or other he neglected to call on the Democrat office, hence we are unable to publish any interview with him. This was a breach of etiquette, for which we shall not soon forgive Mr. Villard.

Call for a Pioneer's Meeting. The undersigned citizens who settled in Linn county at or prior to Dec. 1st, 1852, after due consideration and consultation with pioneer settlers in all parts of the county, have been induced to make a call on all pioneer who made settlement in this county at or prior to said date to meet at Albany for the purpose of organizing a Pioneer's Association for said county. To that end a meeting is hereby appointed to be held on Thursday, May 24th, 1883, at the hour of one o'clock, p. m. in the Court House in Albany, for the purpose of effecting the organization above named. Every person who settled in Linn county at or prior to the date above mentioned is respectfully and most earnestly requested to send his presence at said meeting to assist in said organization.

Mr. A. H. Stinson, of Salem, spent last Sunday in Albany. Mrs. A. H. Stinson, of Salem, was in Albany over Sunday. J. J. Williams, of J. P. of Salem, was in the city Tuesday and made up his bill. Mrs. J. A. Upton, of Portland, was in the city on a visit of a few weeks. Dr. H. A. Davis and Hon. J. P. Schooling of Harbinger were in the city yesterday. Dr. Falls O'Toole returned from Portland last Saturday, having been in that city several weeks. Chas. Fisher, came up from Salem Saturday and remained with his sister Mrs. E. W. Langdon, until Monday. Mr. K. Henderson returned to Harbinger last Saturday. Under the excellent care of Dr. Hill Mr. Henderson has nearly recovered. Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Kenyon, returned from a short trip last Saturday. They will go to their future home at San Jose, Cal., in a short time. A. H. Harris and Rob. Foster called on the steamer last Monday evening for San Francisco, the former to remain and the latter only temporarily. Judge Chenoweth, of Corvallis, passed through the city Saturday on his way home from Eugene. He had been sick for several weeks, but was nearly recovered at the time. Last Tuesday morning Mr. Frank Shields, the telegraph operator at Halsey, and Miss Beattie Lindsay, of Salem, were united in marriage at the residence of the bride's mother in Salem. Mr. W. A. Curtis left last week for Portland, where he has a position in the large establishment of Kaupp, Burdell & Co. Gas is a reliable, steady young man, and will no doubt do well. Fred Lines came over from Prineville lately, and next week will start back for Fossil, in Wasco county. His brother Perry has gone to the same place, where Lines brothers have a ranch of cattle and horses. Geo. K. Chamberlain, Esq., returned from a trip to Eastern Oregon last Monday. He visited Prineville, Centerville, Weston, Milton and other places. They are having a semi-annual meeting, so that business here is unusually lively.

There is considerable sickness in the city among children, mostly diseases of the throat. An old bachelor requests us to publish the following and give it a prominent place, claiming there is any amount of truth in it: Everybody is expected to kiss the baby. The timid little girl who shrinks from the proffered osculation is ordered by the parents to kiss the visitor. The visitor has a slight or severe sore throat. The diptheric germs are conveyed to the lips of the reluctant child, and find lodgement in the throat. A violent attack of diptheria results and spreads through the family, usually by the same direct infection. The first attacked mother leaves her head to the incurable dispensations of Provi-Jeuso, and wonders why her darling should be taken. Her husband, who she had kept at home safely guarded, against all exposure. The doctor takes leprosy and she is ordered to leave the house. She may be the vehicle, but never the origin of the contagion—but the fatal disease was imparted through the lips of that thoughtless visitor. Many who will not permit strangers or friends to kiss their children. Their examples should be followed. Under the motto "Diptheria at Home" should be suspended another, "Don't Kiss Our Children." If indiscreet kissing were only a matter of taste, it would be tolerated; but, as it may be, and often is, deadly, it should be abolished.

Everybody is expected to kiss the baby. The timid little girl who shrinks from the proffered osculation is ordered by the parents to kiss the visitor. The visitor has a slight or severe sore throat. The diptheric germs are conveyed to the lips of the reluctant child, and find lodgement in the throat. A violent attack of diptheria results and spreads through the family, usually by the same direct infection. The first attacked mother leaves her head to the incurable dispensations of Provi-Jeuso, and wonders why her darling should be taken. Her husband, who she had kept at home safely guarded, against all exposure. The doctor takes leprosy and she is ordered to leave the house. She may be the vehicle, but never the origin of the contagion—but the fatal disease was imparted through the lips of that thoughtless visitor. Many who will not permit strangers or friends to kiss their children. Their examples should be followed. Under the motto "Diptheria at Home" should be suspended another, "Don't Kiss Our Children." If indiscreet kissing were only a matter of taste, it would be tolerated; but, as it may be, and often is, deadly, it should be abolished.

Everybody is expected to kiss the baby. The timid little girl who shrinks from the proffered osculation is ordered by the parents to kiss the visitor. The visitor has a slight or severe sore throat. The diptheric germs are conveyed to the lips of the reluctant child, and find lodgement in the throat. A violent attack of diptheria results and spreads through the family, usually by the same direct infection. The first attacked mother leaves her head to the incurable dispensations of Provi-Jeuso, and wonders why her darling should be taken. Her husband, who she had kept at home safely guarded, against all exposure. The doctor takes leprosy and she is ordered to leave the house. She may be the vehicle, but never the origin of the contagion—but the fatal disease was imparted through the lips of that thoughtless visitor. Many who will not permit strangers or friends to kiss their children. Their examples should be followed. Under the motto "Diptheria at Home" should be suspended another, "Don't Kiss Our Children." If indiscreet kissing were only a matter of taste, it would be tolerated; but, as it may be, and often is, deadly, it should be abolished.

Everybody is expected to kiss the baby. The timid little girl who shrinks from the proffered osculation is ordered by the parents to kiss the visitor. The visitor has a slight or severe sore throat. The diptheric germs are conveyed to the lips of the reluctant child, and find lodgement in the throat. A violent attack of diptheria results and spreads through the family, usually by the same direct infection. The first attacked mother leaves her head to the incurable dispensations of Provi-Jeuso, and wonders why her darling should be taken. Her husband, who she had kept at home safely guarded, against all exposure. The doctor takes leprosy and she is ordered to leave the house. She may be the vehicle, but never the origin of the contagion—but the fatal disease was imparted through the lips of that thoughtless visitor. Many who will not permit strangers or friends to kiss their children. Their examples should be followed. Under the motto "Diptheria at Home" should be suspended another, "Don't Kiss Our Children." If indiscreet kissing were only a matter of taste, it would be tolerated; but, as it may be, and often is, deadly, it should be abolished.

Everybody is expected to kiss the baby. The timid little girl who shrinks from the proffered osculation is ordered by the parents to kiss the visitor. The visitor has a slight or severe sore throat. The diptheric germs are conveyed to the lips of the reluctant child, and find lodgement in the throat. A violent attack of diptheria results and spreads through the family, usually by the same direct infection. The first attacked mother leaves her head to the incurable dispensations of Provi-Jeuso, and wonders why her darling should be taken. Her husband, who she had kept at home safely guarded, against all exposure. The doctor takes leprosy and she is ordered to leave the house. She may be the vehicle, but never the origin of the contagion—but the fatal disease was imparted through the lips of that thoughtless visitor. Many who will not permit strangers or friends to kiss their children. Their examples should be followed. Under the motto "Diptheria at Home" should be suspended another, "Don't Kiss Our Children." If indiscreet kissing were only a matter of taste, it would be tolerated; but, as it may be, and often is, deadly, it should be abolished.

Everybody is expected to kiss the baby. The timid little girl who shrinks from the proffered osculation is ordered by the parents to kiss the visitor. The visitor has a slight or severe sore throat. The diptheric germs are conveyed to the lips of the reluctant child, and find lodgement in the throat. A violent attack of diptheria results and spreads through the family, usually by the same direct infection. The first attacked mother leaves her head to the incurable dispensations of Provi-Jeuso, and wonders why her darling should be taken. Her husband, who she had kept at home safely guarded, against all exposure. The doctor takes leprosy and she is ordered to leave the house. She may be the vehicle, but never the origin of the contagion—but the fatal disease was imparted through the lips of that thoughtless visitor. Many who will not permit strangers or friends to kiss their children. Their examples should be followed. Under the motto "Diptheria at Home" should be suspended another, "Don't Kiss Our Children." If indiscreet kissing were only a matter of taste, it would be tolerated; but, as it may be, and often is, deadly, it should be abolished.

Everybody is expected to kiss the baby. The timid little girl who shrinks from the proffered osculation is ordered by the parents to kiss the visitor. The visitor has a slight or severe sore throat. The diptheric germs are conveyed to the lips of the reluctant child, and find lodgement in the throat. A violent attack of diptheria results and spreads through the family, usually by the same direct infection. The first attacked mother leaves her head to the incurable dispensations of Provi-Jeuso, and wonders why her darling should be taken. Her husband, who she had kept at home safely guarded, against all exposure. The doctor takes leprosy and she is ordered to leave the house. She may be the vehicle, but never the origin of the contagion—but the fatal disease was imparted through the lips of that thoughtless visitor. Many who will not permit strangers or friends to kiss their children. Their examples should be followed. Under the motto "Diptheria at Home" should be suspended another, "Don't Kiss Our Children." If indiscreet kissing were only a matter of taste, it would be tolerated; but, as it may be, and often is, deadly, it should be abolished.

Everybody is expected to kiss the baby. The timid little girl who shrinks from the proffered osculation is ordered by the parents to kiss the visitor. The visitor has a slight or severe sore throat. The diptheric germs are conveyed to the lips of the reluctant child, and find lodgement in the throat. A violent attack of diptheria results and spreads through the family, usually by the same direct infection. The first attacked mother leaves her head to the incurable dispensations of Provi-Jeuso, and wonders why her darling should be taken. Her husband, who she had kept at home safely guarded, against all exposure. The doctor takes leprosy and she is ordered to leave the house. She may be the vehicle, but never the origin of the contagion—but the fatal disease was imparted through the lips of that thoughtless visitor. Many who will not permit strangers or friends to kiss their children. Their examples should be followed. Under the motto "Diptheria at Home" should be suspended another, "Don't Kiss Our Children." If indiscreet kissing were only a matter of taste, it would be tolerated; but, as it may be, and often is, deadly, it should be abolished.

Everybody is expected to kiss the baby. The timid little girl who shrinks from the proffered osculation is ordered by the parents to kiss the visitor. The visitor has a slight or severe sore throat. The diptheric germs are conveyed to the lips of the reluctant child, and find lodgement in the throat. A violent attack of diptheria results and spreads through the family, usually by the same direct infection. The first attacked mother leaves her head to the incurable dispensations of Provi-Jeuso, and wonders why her darling should be taken. Her husband, who she had kept at home safely guarded, against all exposure. The doctor takes leprosy and she is ordered to leave the house. She may be the vehicle, but never the origin of the contagion—but the fatal disease was imparted through the lips of that thoughtless visitor. Many who will not permit strangers or friends to kiss their children. Their examples should be followed. Under the motto "Diptheria at Home" should be suspended another, "Don't Kiss Our Children." If indiscreet kissing were only a matter of taste, it would be tolerated; but, as it may be, and often is, deadly, it should be abolished.

Everybody is expected to kiss the baby. The timid little girl who shrinks from the proffered osculation is ordered by the parents to kiss the visitor. The visitor has a slight or severe sore throat. The diptheric germs are conveyed to the lips of the reluctant child, and find lodgement in the throat. A violent attack of diptheria results and spreads through the family, usually by the same direct infection. The first attacked mother leaves her head to the incurable dispensations of Provi-Jeuso, and wonders why her darling should be taken. Her husband, who she had kept at home safely guarded, against all exposure. The doctor takes leprosy and she is ordered to leave the house. She may be the vehicle, but never the origin of the contagion—but the fatal disease was imparted through the lips of that thoughtless visitor. Many who will not permit strangers or friends to kiss their children. Their examples should be followed. Under the motto "Diptheria at Home" should be suspended another, "Don't Kiss Our Children." If indiscreet kissing were only a matter of taste, it would be tolerated; but, as it may be, and often is, deadly, it should be abolished.

Everybody is expected to kiss the baby. The timid little girl who shrinks from the proffered osculation is ordered by the parents to kiss the visitor. The visitor has a slight or severe sore throat. The diptheric germs are conveyed to the lips of the reluctant child, and find lodgement in the throat. A violent attack of diptheria results and spreads through the family, usually by the same direct infection. The first attacked mother leaves her head to the incurable dispensations of Provi-Jeuso, and wonders why her darling should be taken. Her husband, who she had kept at home safely guarded, against all exposure. The doctor takes leprosy and she is ordered to leave the house. She may be the vehicle, but never the origin of the contagion—but the fatal disease was imparted through the lips of that thoughtless visitor. Many who will not permit strangers or friends to kiss their children. Their examples should be followed. Under the motto "Diptheria at Home" should be suspended another, "Don't Kiss Our Children." If indiscreet kissing were only a matter of taste, it would be tolerated; but, as it may be, and often is, deadly, it should be abolished.

Everybody is expected to kiss the baby. The timid little girl who shrinks from the proffered osculation is ordered by the parents to kiss the visitor. The visitor has a slight or severe sore throat. The diptheric germs are conveyed to the lips of the reluctant child, and find lodgement in the throat. A violent attack of diptheria results and spreads through the family, usually by the same direct infection. The first attacked mother leaves her head to the incurable dispensations of Provi-Jeuso, and wonders why her darling should be taken. Her husband, who she had kept at home safely guarded, against all exposure. The doctor takes leprosy and she is ordered to leave the house. She may be the vehicle, but never the origin of the contagion—but the fatal disease was imparted through the lips of that thoughtless visitor. Many who will not permit strangers or friends to kiss their children. Their examples should be followed. Under the motto "Diptheria at Home" should be suspended another, "Don't Kiss Our Children." If indiscreet kissing were only a matter of taste, it would be tolerated; but, as it may be, and often is, deadly, it should be abolished.

Everybody is expected to kiss the baby. The timid little girl who shrinks from the proffered osculation is ordered by the parents to kiss the visitor. The visitor has a slight or severe sore throat. The diptheric germs are conveyed to the lips of the reluctant child, and find lodgement in the throat. A violent attack of diptheria results and spreads through the family, usually by the same direct infection. The first attacked mother leaves her head to the incurable dispensations of Provi-Jeuso, and wonders why her darling should be taken. Her husband, who she had kept at home safely guarded, against all exposure. The doctor takes leprosy and she is ordered to leave the house. She may be the vehicle, but never the origin of the contagion—but the fatal disease was imparted through the lips of that thoughtless visitor. Many who will not permit strangers or friends to kiss their children. Their examples should be followed. Under the motto "Diptheria at Home" should be suspended another, "Don't Kiss Our Children." If indiscreet kissing were only a matter of taste, it would be tolerated; but, as it may be, and often is, deadly, it should be abolished.

Everybody is expected to kiss the baby. The timid little girl who shrinks from the proffered osculation is ordered by the parents to kiss the visitor. The visitor has a slight or severe sore throat. The diptheric germs are conveyed to the lips of the reluctant child, and find lodgement in the throat. A violent attack of diptheria results and spreads through the family, usually by the same direct infection. The first attacked mother leaves her head to the incurable dispensations of Provi-Jeuso, and wonders why her darling should be taken. Her husband, who she had kept at home safely guarded, against all exposure. The doctor takes leprosy and she is ordered to leave the house. She may be the vehicle, but never the origin of the contagion—but the fatal disease was imparted through the lips of that thoughtless visitor. Many who will not permit strangers or friends to kiss their children. Their examples should be followed. Under the motto "Diptheria at Home" should be suspended another, "Don't Kiss Our Children." If indiscreet kissing were only a matter of taste, it would be tolerated; but, as it may be, and often is, deadly, it should be abolished.

Everybody is expected to kiss the baby. The timid little girl who shrinks from the proffered osculation is ordered by the parents to kiss the visitor. The visitor has a slight or severe sore throat. The diptheric germs are conveyed to the lips of the reluctant child, and find lodgement in the throat. A violent attack of diptheria results and spreads through the family, usually by the same direct infection. The first attacked mother leaves her head to the incurable dispensations of Provi-Jeuso, and wonders why her darling should be taken. Her husband, who she had kept at home safely guarded, against all exposure. The doctor takes leprosy and she is ordered to leave the house. She may be the vehicle, but never the origin of the contagion—but the fatal disease was imparted through the lips of that thoughtless visitor. Many who will not permit strangers or friends to kiss their children. Their examples should be followed. Under the motto "Diptheria at Home" should be suspended another, "Don't Kiss Our Children." If indiscreet kissing were only a matter of taste, it would be tolerated; but, as it may be, and often is, deadly, it should be abolished.

Everybody is expected to kiss the baby. The timid little girl who shrinks from the proffered osculation is ordered by the parents to kiss the visitor. The visitor has a slight or severe sore throat. The diptheric germs are conveyed to the lips of the reluctant child, and find lodgement in the throat. A violent attack of diptheria results and spreads through the family, usually by the same direct infection. The first attacked mother leaves her head to the incurable dispensations of Provi-Jeuso, and wonders why her darling should be taken. Her husband, who she had kept at home safely guarded, against all exposure. The doctor takes leprosy and she is ordered to leave the house. She may be the vehicle, but never the origin of the contagion—but the fatal disease was imparted through the lips of that thoughtless visitor