Harper's Weekly sums up as follows the reasons for Bline's inability to carry New York: 1. The railway disclosures. 2. Fear of a restless foreign policy. 3. His opposition to administrative reform. 4. He is a pronounced protectionist.

During General Grant's recent attack of loquacity he discussed rather fully the claims of Senator Logan to a Presidential nomination and expressed the conviction that with "Black Jack" as their standard-bearer, the Republicaus had a sure thing.

The names of "Stalwart" and "Halfbreed" are becoming very fashionable of late, and there is a special bitterness at tached to the manner in which they are pronounced by Republicaus ; which promises no end of fun in the national canvass.
