WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, SEPT. 11th, 1885. The two handsome bay horses behird which the President rides were at the depot a little before eight o'clock on Monday last, attached to the President's carriage. There was nothing stuck up or distingue in the appearance of the brutes, and I be lieve they would be just as happy if they were the property of a butcher, The sable coachman who has driven Grant, Hayes, Garfield and Arthur got down, pulled out his gold watch. and looked like a man with an appointment. It was five minutes after eight when the New York train glided almost noislessly into the station. The railroad employes were evidently expecting somebody and turned their eyes to a sleeping car which was closed. It was not long, however, until a stout gentleman with a bronzed face descended the steps followed by a smaller and more slightly built gentleman. They were the President of the United States and
