ROBINSON & WEST.

Washington.

(From our regular correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, June 19th, 1886.

The convention of Horticulturalists, with three hundred delegates representing every state in the Union, is in session here now; the long strike is over and work has been resumed; a Brazilian Prince has been named; and Congress, despite the warm weather, is bravely working and voting and wasting time as usual. But these matters sound prosy as compared with the great social event of the week.

The official work of the Capital is charmed with the new mistress of the White House. She won their hearts at her first reception on Tuesday evening, and her reputation as a beautiful, dignified, and charming hostess is established forever. Expressions of admiration over her beauty were on every lip. The Russian Minister, Baron de Struve, was heard to declare that he would go back to Europe and tell the people that he had seen the handsomest woman in the world, the wife of the President of the United States.

Mrs. Cleveland was entirely self-possessed, and went through the trying ordeal of being stared at by hundreds of the most critical people in Washington society without evincing nervousness or excitement. Well known society women touched one another and exchanged expressive glances as they recognized the presence in the White House of one of the prettiest women ever seen in that position.

The old mansion probably never presented a more brilliant spectacle than on this occasion. Its interior was a bower of flowers and plants, tropical in their magnificence. But the impatient crowd was indifferent to the decorations, as well as to the fact that a veritable South American Prince was to be a guest that evening. It was long to stare at the white-robed bride, and when she appeared, leaning on the President's arm as they marched to their position in the Blue Room, there was considerable ill-concealed curiosity, with much impulsive pushing and craning of necks.

The President wore his customary evening suit of black, and his wife wore her bridal dress of ivory satin, with its long drawn out train of five yards. She carried a fan of white ostrich tips, which she wielded with energy as the evening grew warmer, while the President fanned his dripping brow with a large cambric handkerchief. It was remarked that the President never looked real happy at a reception before. The guests included all who are identified with the social, political, and official life of the Capital, but to name them would be an endless task.

The prospect of an early adjournment of Congress grows less with each day, and many members of judgment assert that the middle of August will find them still here.

Three wise men of the House of Representatives exhibit quite a contrariety of opinions in regard to the receipts and expenditures of the Government for the next fiscal year. Mr. Hiseock, who claims to have gone over the question with the utmost care, makes bold to assure the country that there will be a deficit of over $14,000,000.

Mr. Morrison, who has thoroughly familiarized himself with the financial situation, states that instead of there being a deficit, there will be an increased surplus. Mr. Randall, Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, who is understood to know everything there is to know about monetary affairs, steers between the two, and gives it as his judgment that the revenues and the appropriations will come out about even.

Mr. Randall said, however, that the startling deficiency figures that Mr. Hiseock had discovered, did not surprise him in the least, since the increase this year over last year for pensions was $15,750,000. Still, the new Administration has cut down the expenses of the Government in so many different ways that there is hope for an even adjustment.

The work of retrenchment is progressing rapidly now through the dismissal of Department Clerks. The Treasury has just dispensed with forty supernumeraries, and proposes to discharge many more. In consequence, all of the Republican retainers are again panic stricken.

The outlook now is blainical for the Republican party in 1888. He seems to be lengthening his cords and strengthening his stakes as though he expected to live forever and remain among eligible and expectant candidates to the last.

A ROULETTE REPUBLICAN

Among many interesting incidents in the life of "Earthquake Allen," a sobriquet which his powerful voice gained him, was his account of his visit to Andrew Jackson late on the night of March 3rd, 1837. Mr. Allen had come to Washington to enter the Senate at noon the next day, when the Presidential term of Gen. Jackson would expire. On reaching the White House, Mr. Allen, who was well known to the attendants, was shown into the President's bed chamber. Chief Justice Taney and Senator Forsythe, of Georgia, afterwards Minister to Spain and Secretary of State, were already in the room, and Jackson himself, active and to a certain extent restless, as usual, stood in the middle of the room smoking a short corn cob pipe. He congratulated Allen warmly upon his election to the Senate, and then, calling to a young Irishman who acted as his body servant and waiter, turned to his visitors and said:

"Gentlemen, I think the occasion will warrant me in breaking over one of my own rules. Let us drink a little Madeira." The wine was brought. Jackson took a small glassful—it was the first liquor he had been known to touch for several months—and then, asking his friends to excuse him for a few moments, he finished writing a letter upon which he was engaged, sealed, directed it, and, lighting his cob pipe again, took a whiff or two, and stood silently watching the face of a great, tall, old-fashioned clock which stood in one corner. It was five minutes before midnight, five minutes before the beginning of the day upon which Andrew Jackson would cease to be President of the United States. Slowly the minute hand moved round the dial. The silence in the room became almost painful. It was broken by the clear, sharp bell of the clock striking the last hour of a day which had gone forever. Then Jackson, starting suddenly and looking toward his friends, said, with a quick, nervous laugh: "Gentlemen, I am no longer President of the United States, but as good a citizen as any of you." Subsequently he expressed to them a feeling of great relief at the prospect of escaping from the official cares which had begun to weigh most heavily upon him, saying to Allen, among other things of the same sort: "I am very glad to get away from all this excitement and bother." That day Van Buren was inaugurated President of the United States, and Jackson, at the end of his second term, left the White House—left so poor that he was obliged to borrow from his friends $5,000 with which to rebuild "The Hermitage," his old family mansion, which some time before had been burned to the ground.

"How about 1888? Well, everything seems to be drifting toward Blaine's re-nomination. The men who 'run' caucuses and elect delegates are for him, and they evidently mean to make him the candidate again. Besides, we don't seem to have any real leaders in the party for the men who believe in something, and especially for the young men of convictions, to rally around. The Machine is for Blaine, and unless the other sort of Republicans can unite on somebody else who represents some positive principle—of which, I am sorry to say, I see no prospect—Blaine will win by sheer force of inertia. I see that in New Jersey the Republicans are trying to make an anti-saloon issue for the party, and I shall watch the experiment with interest, but I have not much faith in such a movement, with the Tribunes helping through such a rump sellers' job as the Shook-Haughton deal. As things look now we shall nominate Blaine again in 1888 and get beaten worse than we were in 1854. It is not a pleasant prospect for a man like me, who, although he has always admired Blaine personally, does not want to see the party ruined for any man."

PERSONAL

Mrs. Achah Whipple of Danbarton, N. H., will be a hundred years old on the 24th of this month.

Mr. William H. Vanderbilt, with her youngest son, George, will occupy during July and August the cottage recently purchased by the latter at Bar Harbor, and known as the "Devil's Love" villa.

Prof. Morton, who testifies so glowingly that oleomargarine is better, copied to Senator Plumb in answer to a question that chronically a hog that died from disease could not be detected from one that died a natural death. Then we should say that a chemical opinion of oleomargarine was of very little value to the general public.

Judge Forbes, who has lately died at the age of eighty-six, was a highly respected bachelor. Daniel Webster often consulted with him on legal matters. His hobby was clocks, of which he had a large number. When the Northampton Bank was robbed he lost more than $300,000 in bonds. On being told of this fact, he replied, "I don't care a continental; they are all registered." By his advice the bank immediately notified the Treasury Department at Washington, and suffered no loss from the theft of its bonds.

The inscription on the brass memorial tablet erected in All-Souls Church, New York, to the memory of its former pastor, the Rev. Dr. Bellows, reads: "Henry Whitney Bellows; born in Boston, Jan. 11, 1814; died in New York, Jan. 30, 1882. Forty-three years minister of this church, to which he gave the name All-Souls. A preacher strong, fervent, uplifting; a courageous thinker, a persuasive orator. A patriot, loving freedom, indignant at wrong, a life-long philanthropist; president of the United States Sanitary Commission, 1861-1873. An ardent, generous friend, joyous with the joyful, tender with the sorrowful. A devout Christian, trusting in God, and hoping all things of men." The sculptor is Mr. Augustus St. Gaudens, and the figure is life-size and standing.

Mr. Parnell is a protestant and one of his strongest supporters is Ireland are protestants.

HOW OLD HICKORY WENT OUT OF OFFICE

Syrup of Figs.

Manufactured only by the California Fig Syrup Co., San Francisco, Cal., is Nature's Own Tree Laxative. This pleasant California liquid fruit remedy may be had of Foshay & Mason at fifty cents or one dollar. It is the most pleasant, prompt, and effective remedy known to cleanse the system; to act on the Liver, Kidneys and Bowels; gently yet thoroughly; to dispel headaches, colds, and fevers; to cure constipation, indigestion and kindred ills.

On subscription, 20 cords of grub oak wood and 20 cords of big fir, maple or ash wood. Let us hear from those who want to supply us wood, at once.

The Hardest of Combination.

True delicacy of flavor with true efficacy of action, has been attained in the new California liquid fruit remedy, Syrup of Figs. Its pleasant taste and beneficial effects have rendered it immensely popular. For sale by Foshay & Mason, wholesale and retail.

You are going East by water and get Oregon Short Line. It is the only another column.

THE LIGHT RAINBOW

Simple, New, Strong, Swift

Quinine, that used to sell for $3 and $3 an ounce, is now offered in a wholesale way at 55 cents per ounce. Fifty millions of people are better off for this reduction in the price of a useful drug; but two or three manufacturing firms, no longer protected, are obliged to do a legitimate business at fair profits. What a howl the tariff organs set up when quinine was added to the free list!

Mrs. Chavelant appears to have captured the social world at Washington completely. The President is certainly a lucky fellow all the time.

A Wise Reform.

The habit of administering quinine in powerful doses, as an antidote to malarial fevers, was once dangerously common. Happily this practice has undergone a wide reform. Not only the public, but professional men have adopted, not wholly of course, but largely, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as a safe, potent substitute for the pernicious alkaloid. The consequences of this change are most important. Now fever and ague sufferers are cured—formerly their complaints were only for the time relieved, or half cured—the remedy eventually failing to produce any appreciable effect, except the doses were increased. A course of the Bitters, persistently followed, breaks up the worst attacks and prevents their return. The evidence in favor of this sterling, specific and household medicine is of an ambiguous character, but positive and satisfactory, and the sources whence it proceeds are very numerous.

Great Britain is already in the full tide of political commotion. The progress, as well as the result, of the elections will be big with the fate of millions of people, caste domination and popular liberty. The issue in the fight can be briefly summarized into this proposition: Shall the aristocratic rule, or shall the people?
