To the Outcours Remedies I owe My Health, My Happiness, and My Life.

A day never passes that I do not think and speak of the Outcours Remedies. Seven years ago, all of a sudden I was seized with a severe cold, and I was obliged to seek aid, and painful to bear.
People turned aside when they saw me, in disgust, and I was ashamed to be on the street or in society.
Physicians and their treatment, and all medicines failed to do any good. In a moment of despair I tried the Outcours Remedies—Outcours, the Great Skin Cure, and Outcours Soap, an exquisite skin beautifier, and Outcours. Resulted, the new Blood Purifier, internally; the small tins (as I call them) gradually disappeared, and the large one broke, in about two weeks, discharging large quantities of matter, leaving two slight scars in my neck to-day to tell the story of my suffering. My weight was one hundred and fifteen sticks pounds; my height now is one hundred and sixty solid, healthy pounds, and my height is only five feet five inches. In my travels I praise the Outcours Remedies, north, south, east and west. To the Outcours Remedies I owe my health, my happiness, and my life. A prominent New York Druggist asked me the other day, "Do you still use the Outcours Remedies?" "You look as if you were healthy." My reply was, "I do, and shall always. I have never known what sickness was since using the Outcours Remedies." Sometimes I am laughed at for praising them to people not acquainted with their merits, but sooner or later they will come to their senses and believe the same as those that use them, as doctors have whom I have told. May the time come when there shall be a large Outcours Supply store in every city in the land, for the benefit of humanity, where the Outcours Remedies shall be sold cheap, so that there will be rarely a need of ever another drug store.

A LEGEND OF THE WILLAMETTE.

(Written for the STATE RIGHTS DEMOCRAT.)

Mark what strange tale are you telling,
Of some long forgotten lore;
Is it of a red man's wandering,
Who was never heard of more?
Or is it of dauntless heroes,
Who lay dying on the plain Of some ancient field of battle,
Marked with bodies of the slain?

No, I tell no tale of heroes,
Who lay dying in their gore,
But a legend of an Indian—Known by many deeds of yore.

Thus the tale the river told me,
As the gentle breeze swept by,
Of the Indian of the legend,
Which once told shall never die.

Long before Columbus' vessel Crossed the dark and briny sea,
The clear waters o'erspread his channels, Shaded by the maple tree.

Under which at eve the Indian,
Close about his watchfire's blaze,
Told the legends of his country,
And the deeds of other days.

Of the deeds he did in battle,
How he won the mad campaign;
How the foe he put to flying,
Till in them he lived again.

And again he saw a vision Of those happy days gone by,
Of those friends that long have left him,
Who then lived beyond the sky.

Thus in fancy he beheld them,
Holding fast each other's hands;
Just across the flowing river,
In the happy hunting land.

And he heard the gentle spirit Whisper low into his ear,
Come to where there's every hunting, Stay not lone and friendless.

And the old man gave in answer,
"I've lived long upon this earth,
Seen the young both mad with pleasure, Drank with them the cup of mirth."

"Killed the wild deer, caught the panther, Shot the eagle on his wing,
Met the foe in deadly battle, Slew him with my bow and sting."

"But those scenes have passed forever, Gone forever from my view,
Living only in my memory, Bright and steadfast, firm and true."

"All those friends I loved so dearly In the dawn of early life,
All have left me sad and weary, Battling with endless strife."

"And since you, then, gentle spirit, Whispered low for me to come,
Where the aged all have plenty
And the weary are at home."

"Take me to that land of plenty,
Where eternal summer reigns;
Where my friends have long been waiting,
Meet to never part no more."

And just as the dawn was breaking,
Softly o'er the waters bright,
Came a ship that robed by angels, Clothed in brilliant robes of light.

Then they beckoned to the Indian,
Telling him that they had come;
And his face it grew more bright,
Thinking of that peaceful home.

Then they glided softly southward, O'er the lovely waters smooth, While they seemed to grow more brilliant, As they onward swiftly moved.

And majestic strains of music,
Tuned by angels harps on high,
Seemed to mingle with the waters, As the golden light flow by.

Mingled with the lovely waters,
As they dashed upon the shore,
Speaking words of mystic meaning,
Words that ne'er were heard before.

Many years have come and vanished,
Child to age had grown and gone,
Age on age had been and were not,
Since that strange eventful morn.

Time had marked the length by centuries,
Lifts had had its trials and pains;
Earth had witnessed many battles,
Marked with bodies of the slain.

Still the Indian loved to linger,
When the western sky grew pale,
Close beside the lovely waters,
Listening to the mystic tale.

Telling o'er that ancient legend,
Of the mighty man of yore,
Of the deeds he did while living,
And his fight from off these shores.

But at length there came two strangers,
To this far off wilderness;
Two men of another nation,
Strange of tongue and strange of dress.

And a' long the pale face people Crossed the wide and barren plain;
Come to where the lovely waters Mingle with angelic strains.

Since years have come and vanished,
Since the pale face first came here,
Two men of another nation,
Who were never known to fear.

But the red man he has vanished,
Gone forever from these shores,
Living only in our memory,
As his wild mysterious lore.

And since then a mighty nation,
Has spread far on every side,
Crossing far that bare dominion,
To which was the Indian's pride.

As I stand upon the border, Listening to the gentle wave,
As it travels ever onward, Onward to a boundless grave,

As I stand I ponder o'er, O'er the wild mysterious lore,
Of the red man as he wandered,
Lone and free along these shores.

And why should I not thus ponder O'er the tales and myths of them?

As the saga of creation

Ponder o'er the myths of men.

Who from time thus immemorial, Sacrifice child and sire,
To a God who knows no mercy, Danna them with eternal fire.

Fare thee well, my lovely waters,
For the mystic tale is told,
Tale which never pale face people Ever heard rehearsed before.

Fare thee well, my lovely waters,
Till invoked thy tale to tell By some loftier mind than mine is, Lovely waters, fare thee well.

(From our regular correspondence.)

WASHINGTON, July 16th, 1886.

Nothing has attracted more attention for some time probably than the President's latest order dismissing all Federal office holders to take no active part in politics during the coming campaign. The principle which he declares to impress upon the heads of Departments and their subordinates is that political action should be kept free from official connection. He does not ask them to abstain from politics, but he draws nice lines of distinction. They are not to misuse their offices for partisan ends.

The order created quite a surprise at the Capitol on Thursday, but our law-makers were busily engaged in the pressing duties of legislation that there was not much discussion of the subject. There are but few Democrats who do not sustain the President's ideas, if public expressions be a criterion. They say it is in accordance with Mr. Cleveland's previous position and demonstrates his consistency.

Many of the Republican Senators even give the President credit for sincerity, but they express faithless-ness in the power of the order to change the situation. They say it will be subjected to a very liberal construction during the campaign, and that it cannot be enforced because it will fail to get the support of high government officials. This of course remains to be seen.

The Morrison resolution for disposing of the surplus in the Treasury passed the House by the overwhelming vote of 207 to 67, partly not being strictly drawn. The resolution reads as follows: "Whenever the surplus in the Treasury, including amount held for redemption of United States notes, shall exceed the sum of $100,000,000, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to apply such excess, in sums not less than ten millions per month, during the existence of any such surplus or excess, to the payment of the interest bearing indebtedness of the United States, payable at the option of the Government."

In the debate on the surplus Representative McKinley, of Ohio, was disposed to mingle some fun, said he, "there is not a single thing upon which this Democratic party agrees and is in positive accord except getting offices; not one." Mr. Morrison interposed, "and we are getting along only middling at that." "Yes you are getting them very slowly," said Mr. McKinley, and the Democrats laughed with the Republicans.

Many are wondering what will be the fate of the River and Harbor bill which has nearly reached a vote on the Senate, and with which the Senators have been sitting up late into the night hoping to get through with it and thereby hasten the final adjournment. And then they are wondering what will become of it when it goes back for conference to the House Committee, and again when it comes from conference into the House. Congressman Hatch, of Mo., Oleomargarine's implacable foe, will not vote for it when it comes back.
He said he strained his conscience to vote for it the first time, but his moral courage will stand by him when it comes around again.

Senator Vest made a long speech in which he said he had grave and reverend Senators battonhole him and say that if they did not get this or that appropriation put in the bill they would be beaten in the next election. It was a case of "Help me, Cassius, or I sink." Senators had come into the Chamber and had their amendments put into the bill, and they had then stood up within three feet of Mr. Vest, and denounced the whole scheme as a piece of unconstitutional corruption. Combinations had been made on the very floor of the Senate in relation to this bill. The plan was to help me put in my appropriation and I will help you put in yours. He had Senators come to him and say, "Yes, you were right
