It is too early to decide whether the oleomargarine law is equal to the accomplishment of all that it aims at but the first two weeks of its operation leads the internal revenue officers to figure up an income to Government from a mildon to a million and a half from this source by the first of Nev. 1887. The manufacturers of artificial substitues for butter say that the law has belped rather than injured their business. The Treasury stamp they think, gives a certain dignity to their goods which him. they did not possessbefore, and many persons appear to regard it as a guaranty that the contents of the package are pure. In a certain sense only the stamp may be said to be a guaranty. The purchaser is not cheated as to the character of the article he is buying. He asks for eleomargarine or butterine and he gets it every time. Wherever a proper enfercement of the law is defrayed by Congress, he will also know when he is getting a poor article or a good oze.
