the other day when he declared that "very Mr. Blaine as the strongest republican Secretary Vilas Friday in the case of many people are Democrats who are not ware of it." As the clearing away of the louds shows the mariner the stars and enables him to determine where he is, so the present discussion of economic question dissipates the fog of partisanship and discloses the path of safety.

Mr. McKinley then went on to shake this suit of "all wool" in the faces of the democrats in refutation of the oft-repeated assertion that the tariff on woolen goods enhanced the prices of those products manu factured in this country, and he asserted in his turn that the laborer paid no more for his clothing in this than in any other country. If these claims are true, then it follows : Either, that the efficiency of American labor employed in the woolen manufacturing industry is great enough to overcome any difference in wages here and abroad ; or, American laber is paid no more in that industry than English labor. What, therefore? Why, the tariff is absolutely useless in either case as a protection against pauper labor. There is no escape from this dilemma. The war tariff men must either admit that the duties enhance the price not only of products imported, but of these of demostic manufacture; or they must admit that American labor needs no protection. More than all this, they must admit that, if duties of So and 100 per cent are needed on these same woolen clothes -which they so strenuously claim-to afabroad, then the amount of these duties a stretch, The Senate, on the 13th ult., passed the must be added to the price of the product
