It is not probable that they will ever agree to set a date until forced to do so by the democrats. There Is no earthly reason for continuing the debate beyond this week, yet the republicans are talking of keeping it up until the middle of July, and they will do it, too, it the democrats do not prevent it by keeping a quorum of their own present to shut them off. There is much dissatisfaction among democrats in the House over the sugar schedule of the tariff bill as it has been adopted by the Senate, and the prediction will never agree to it in its present shape. It is argued by its opponents that the tariff on refined sugar is prohibitive and will result in no possible benefit for anybody except the sugar trust, and an attempt is now being made to organize the democrats in the House against it and in favor of free refined sugar.
