In the death of our brother we are made to feel the strength of the bond which unites us While still young in years, he yet showed maturity of judgment and of the other virtues which characterize the full grown man. He was strong in integrity and virtue; his voice and influence were freely given to preserve peace and harmony among us. His example was ever such as to win our respect and confidence and the mem ory of his work and life will remain to stimulate and encourage us in our purory of his work and life will remain to stimulate and encourage us in our pursuit of the object and purposes for which our club was organized. While we keenly feel his loss, we gladly accept the legacy he has bequeathed us: A character worthy our emulation.
