Charges Against Prof. How-

From the Oregonian :

Charges of intoxication have been formally filed against Charles Howland, a teacher in the High School. The matter is now in the bands of the Board of Di rectors, who, if the charges are proved will request his resignation.

Howland, who is a married man, is instructor of physical geography and mathematics, and was classed as among the best teachers in the school. He held his present position since September, 1898. At one time he was a book-keeper in New York City, while for the two years preceding his election as a teacher in this city he held a chair in Albany (Or.) College. While in the latter school he also acted as leader and director of the college band.

Mr. Howland, during his first year at the High School was, in character, every-thing to be desired, and was a foremost leader in school politics. He was the main mover in reorganizing the orchestra, in which he p'ayed cornet. The Gice Club was also greatly aided by him.
