AN EULOGY,

POETRY.

Written in Memory of Eddy Moser.

BY ALICE J. MOSER. Dead, the sweetest, purest babe laid 'neath the sod, Gone to live with pure angels and a sinless God, Cold as marble was the snow-white, beautiful brow, For 'neath "mother earth" we've laid him

We donned on him a robe of purest white, Fit emble of angels of holy, celestial light; In his cold white fingers we placed a flower, Resembling life, which seemingly passed in an hour.

Upon his marble brow we placed our last He's gone to dwell in the city of eternal Where there's no sickness, sorrow, death or sin, An abode where innocence and purity dwell within. Oh! most holy is the city where he's gone, Of its occupants pray I may be one, That I may lead a life as faultless as he,

Thence to abide with the blest throughout
