A VISION OF 1893.

I was sitting by the fireside the other evening, thinking of everything in general and nothing in particular, when, hearing a noise and stamping at the door, methought I rose to open it, when it flew back with a crash, waking the cat, who was sleeping by the fire, and causing her to retreat under my chair in

Before I had time to wink, there walked in a young person, dressed so queerly that I could not tell whether it was a man or a woman until it spoke. It wore loose trowsers, reaching just below the knee, and plaid stockings and high boots completed the lower portion of its attire. A loose sack coat, open enough in front to disclose a snowy shirt, covered the upper portion of its body, while a two story hat was set jauntily on the side of the head, the black hair being cut short and parted on one side as I could perceive after the hat had been knocked off by the ceiling.

"Well, what are you looking at? I hope you'll know me the next time you see me. I suppose you would like to know who I am, well, I am the Coming Woman-not coming any more, because I am here; and here I intend to stay. It is the year 1893, and things are entirely changed now from the time when you were born. You look as oldfashioned as if you had just stepped out of Noah' Ark. How old are you?" said this amazing person.

I stammered forth I was twenty er. But where had I been in all those years? Had-I, like Rip Van had found an affinity yet. Winkle, been asleep? "Asleep? Why, of course, you
