REAL RETRENCHMENT.

The following article we take from the New York Sun of May 7th. It has the true ring about and states facts that the people should study: "Until the public expenditures are reduced to a permanent peace basis, such as existed before the civil war, but allowing for the intermediate growth of the country, the present extravagance and the taxation necessary to maintain it must continue. This is a self-evident proposition. The Republicans have made no honest effort during the last six years of Grantism to curtail these expenses.

"The Ku-Klux bills, enforcement acts, and other violent legislation, were invented for partisan objects, and as pretences for enormous appropriations of public money. The patronage thus created was distributed in the Senate and House of Representatives, so that the Republican majorities may be said to have had a personal interest in keeping up this costly and corrupt system.

"A reaction has commenced, and the country has emphatically pronounced against these prodigal practices. Reform is demanded, not only because it is right in itself, but for the more urgent reason of a general prostration in trade and business, which exacts economy from the State as well as from the individual citizen.

"It is alleged by the authors and abettors of the existing scale of expenditures that a positive reduction cannot be made without a shock to the whole public service. That may be true, but it does not affect the necessity of the proposed remedy. When a limb is amputated to preserve the life of a human being, it is of course shocks the system, and a wooden leg or arm is no particular ornament or convenience. But this local privation bears no comparison with the life which surgery saved.

"Chronic abuses have grown up and fastened themselves on all the departments, which can only be removed by the knife. No tampering with them or quackery will satisfy the exigency. They must be cut out, root and branch, like a consuming cancer, with a stern nerve, a cool head, and a steady hand.

"The cost of carrying on the Government can be reduced fifty millions of dollars a year, without impairing the efficiency of its honest administration. To do this effectively, the magnificence of generals and admirals must give way to simple habits, sinecures must be abolished, and public officers become servants of the people who are taxed to pay their salaries.

"Let us see how this reduction can be accomplished without harm or injustice. During the last five years the army, under Grant, has averaged a cost of $43,500,000 per annum in round numbers for 25,000 men. It is contended that 10,000 soldiers are abundant for all wars; but a reduction of one-third alone of the average outlay would save $14,500,000 a year.

"The navy during the same period has averaged $23,500,000 in round numbers, against about $13,000,000 a year preceding the rebellion, when it had double the vigor. A return to the old scale would save $10,000,000 per annum.

"The civil and miscellaneous expenses for these five years have averaged $63,500,000 a year, against $26,000,000 a year for the five years preceding the rebellion. This monstrous difference is partially explained by the prodigality in public buildings all over the country, the multiplication of offices, and jobbery in a variety of forms. A reduction of $20,000,000 a year at the very lowest is practicable without derangement.

"The Indian service has averaged more than $6,500,000 a year for this period, against about $3,500,000 for the corresponding time before the rebellion, when the Indians were nearly double their present number. Thus $3,000,000 a year can easily be saved from this source. These four appropriation bills would, with the proposed reductions, give the followings savings, respectively: Army $14,500,000 | Miscel. civil $20,000,000 Navy 10,000,000 | Indian service 3,000,000 Total $47,500,000

"Heretofore there has been a deficiency bill resulting from excessive and unauthorized outlays by the heads of departments, ranging from two to eleven millions every year. There is no reason why that excess should not be cut off, and all contracts beyond the limit of appropriations be explicitly forbidden by severe penalties for disobedience.

"The public printing house is a source of corruption, and ought to be abolished entirely. Two millions a year are expended upon it, nearly half of which goes into the pockets of a Ring. The Department of Justice squandered over two millions a year on marshals and deputies, for partisan purposes. The Post Office is now paying several millions a year to a Ring of contractors who succeeded through straw bids and the connivance of the late Post-Master-General. The expenses of the Senate and House of Representatives, with a costly Capitol police of idlers, ought to be cut down one-third at the first dash.

"In every aspect, fifty millions of reduction is a moderate estimate for retrenchment and the margin might easily be enlarged by a close examination of all the items in detail. We have reason to believe that the new House of Representatives will insist generally upon scaling the appropriations on this broad basis. Any other course would disappoint the public expectation.

"The Senate will resist any such economy, and be backed by all the power of the President, the army and navy, and the widespread influence of patronage in all its seductive and treacherous forms. The issue will then be made up squarely before the country, and if the worst comes to the worst, the the House can hold the purse strings tight and defy the Senate and its selfish allies. So there is every prospect of an interesting session next winter."

NORTH AND SOUTH.

An Exchange very truthfully says: "At Richmond, Va., on the night of April 28th, a large number of ex-Confederates, including general, field and staff officers, serenaded Gen. W. F. Bartlett, of that city, but formerly of Massachusetts, in acknowledgment of his speech at the Lexington Centennial celebration. In his reply to a complimentary address by General Bradley T. Johnson, on the part of the Confederates, Gen. Bartlett said: "The chief defect in the great fabric of our Union, which while it existed rendered a perfect harmony of interests impossible, has been rudely swept away, leaving a structure more permanent, more full of glorious possibilities, than our fathers dared to hope for. To cement this new Union on a sounder foundation and avail ourselves of the promises of the future is a solemn task well-fitted to these centennial years. As soldiers who fought the battle out in good faith, you can wield the strongest influence for peace and right. Your worst enemies at the South are the few men here and there who talk more bravely than they fight, and it is the same at the North; but the people there, tired of these politicians whose voices are still for war are fast replacing them by men of less selfish purpose, whose views are bounded by no narrow lines of State or section or party, but who desire justice and prosperity for all. The war through which we passed developed and proved on both sides the noble qualities of American manhood. It has left to us soldiers once foes, now friends; a memory of hard fought fields, of fearful sacrifices, of heroic valor, and it has taught us the lessons to be transmitted to our children that divided we are terrible, united we are forever invincible." "Everywhere the spirit and tone of the Union General Bartlett's speech at Lexington, and the Confederate General Egan's speech at Augusta, are heartily commended. The Philadelphia Inquirer declares, that if the press of the country would unite to scatter broadcast the noble, manly sentiments of the soldiers of the two armies, "a real peace would be quickly established between the North and South."

"It adds: "Reconstruction and union, to be real, must be matters of feeling and interest, not of legislation. The North and South must begin to be just, one to the other—each to recognize the good there is in each, and to strive to become better acquainted. They only want to know each other better, to like each other better, and they only want the bitterness of the war to be forgotten to induce the South as well as the North to keep step to the music of the Union. And if Decoration-day shall bring this about, it should come to be considered the best of all the days in the year—the day which brought peace and goodwill to once warring brothers of North and South." The Springfield Union says: "Had the centennial era opened fifteen years ago, it is quite likely that the civil war would have been postponed, on account of the exaltation of the patriotic sentiment. Perhaps it was better the war should come then and be got over with; but from the revival of the spirit of nationality and patriotic enthusiasm in the centennial season now upon us, we may confidently expect a beneficial and powerful influence in reuniting North and South in devotion to a common country."

LATE NEWS.

CHICAGO, May 10.—Some of the political friends of Blaine, who have arrived here within the last few days, are quietly canvassing the political situation. They frankly state that Blaine is an avowed candidate for the Presidency, and believe that if a convention were held to-day he would secure the nomination. They state that Blaine's policy from now until the meeting of next Congress will be silence. They are somewhat curious to discover the meaning of the Treasury changes, which, they imagine, may have political import. They seem to think the removal of Douglass is, to some extent, a blow at Pennsylvania, and, of course, regret it, for they have considered Pennsylvania as one of Blaine's strongholds. They maintain that the indications of the last two months plainly show that Bristow himself is a Presidential aspirant, a fact which appears to be believed by all the principal political people who have recently been here.

Beecher-Tilton-ies.

The Beecher case was in progress May 13th and several witnesses were recalled and examined and other testimony introduced. In the afternoon the counsel on both sides announced that they had nothing else to offer. It was understood that only one of Tilton's counsel would sum up, and Everts and Porter would do so for Beecher. Everts stated that together they would not occupy more than five days. In view of time taken to get in evidence he would suggest that the Court adjourn until Wednesday next. This was agreed to.

New York, May 14.

Tilton's letters to Woodhull are being published. One of them commences "My Dear Victoria: I have arranged with Frank that you shall see Beecher at my house on Friday night."

Another says: "I am expecting you at dinner at 7. It will be a picnic frolic. Three of us around a center-table supplied with Frank's Burgundy. Will call for you in a carriage. You will stay all night at Emma's."

Another says: "I have a room at the Fifth Avenue Hotel where I shall stay a few days, until Frank's return. I will drive up with you in your carriage at 5 o'clock."

Alluding to the decline of oratory, Senator Booth, said at Terre Haute, the other day, "The journalist has acquired the influence and consequence which the orator has lost. A Western lunatic has been skulking around the White House, Washington lately with a loaded pistol, and recently, remarks a contemporary, the detectives unfortunately captured him."

Ben Wade, of Ohio, declines emphatically to be a candidate for Governor against Governor Allen, the present democratic incumbent. The reasons he gives are, first, that he says that it has always been a fundamental principle with him and which he has never violated, that the office should seek the man and not the man the office. He says that he early took a solemn oath that he would never stump for an office that he was himself to fill, and that he would sooner "beg for old clothes" than solicit any mortal for a position. He further says that these will no doubt be considered very old-fashion ideas, but that "if this glorious government is ever ruined, it will be by office-seekers."
