ONLY A DEPENDENT.

Adaline Reynolds sat alone in one of the many rooms of her uncle's splendid city mansion. Yet the brilliantly lighted parlors were thronged with a gay assemblage. Why was she the only one sad?

It was her cousin Clara's birth night, and when Clara had been asked who Adaline was, the cruel answer was "only a dependent, a distant relation of father's."

Adaline had heard the contemptuous reply, and hence she was alone and weeping.

Adaline sat, her eyes resting on the silver moon, which was shedding its light full upon her upturned face. That face was one of the most beautiful imaginable.

Tears were gathering in the large, soul-lit eyes, and fell upon the small white hand.
Adaline, at this, started up as if an adder had stung her, and brushed tear drops from her eyes, saying:

"Back, back to your fountain! Although I am only a dependent, I will win a name, and they shall be proud of their poor cousin."

Slowly Adaline dropped upon her knees asking God to guide her in the step she was going to take.

When she arose the guests were departing, for she could hear the carriages as they rolled away. Yet she did not retire until the dawn of day. Her slender fingers were flying over the paper on which she was writing.

The morning sun was shining bright and beautiful. Mr. Howard sat alone in his library. He was thinking of the past.
Once more the grey-haired man was a child, seated around his father's fireside with his brothers and sisters, listening to his kind sire's advice, or looking to catch his mother's love-lit smile. Then a cloud passed between him and his life of sunshine. The death-angel claimed his fondly loved mother; another and another passed away until all was gone but his isolated sister Ada.

Her sad just verging into womanhood. Another vision passed before him, his new, proud, aristocratic wife. She had deceived him, it mattered not now; it was too late for remedy. His daughters, three in number, had grown up to womanhood and inherited all their mother's foolish pride.

He had heard Clara, the eldest, but the evening before, say Adaline was only a dependent. The words had sunk deep in to his heart. Was not Adaline his sister's child?

Again, and Ada passed before him arrayed in her bridal robes. He heard her farewell words and felt her farewell kisses. She was going to her western home.

A few short years passed by when one day a letter came telling him of his sister's death, then of her husband's, and asking him to rear her child as his own.
Did he not love that child as his own?
Yes, nobly had he done his duty to that dead sister's child. But alas! they were the only kind ones Adaline received.

While he sat thus, recalling the past, two soft arms stole around his neck, and a sweet voice said, "Uncle, what are you thinking about?"

"Must I tell you what it was? About my little pet. Oh how lonely I shall be when she is gone."

"Gone where, Uncle?"

"Why, to Mrs. Westbrook's. Did I not promise to send you there next month?"

"Yes, Uncle, but I thought that you had forgotten it. I am so happy now at the thought of going back to dear Walnut Hill once more; not at the thought of leaving you, Uncle," and the tears came into her eyes as she kissed him, who cared more for her happiness than his own.

Again she murmured the words of the night before: "I will win a name for his sake." And in a few moments she was walking down the street towards the postoffice, bearing in her hand the treasured thoughts that she had penned when hope was almost dead in her heart.

"Mother," said Clara Howard, "do you know that father is going to send Adaline back to school again?"

"Yes, I know it, and I have told him that she would repay him with ungrate-fulness."

Just then Emma came in with a newspaper, saying:
"There is such a beautiful piece of poetry in the Gazette; it is called 'Thoughts of Heaven'; and the editor has complimented the authoress, whose name is Lena."

Clara read it and poured forth praises on
