Corvallis, May 9, 1879.

MUNICIPAL ELECTION. Our annual city election passed off, last Monday exceedingly quiet. A stranger would scarcely have known it was "election day," except from the fact that the saloons were closed. No regular nominations having been made, every candidate ran on his "own hook." Some interest was manifested in the offices of Mayor and Recorder, but the meagre vote polled shows that but little interest was manifested in the election. There were no political, or even local issues, made publicly. Although it was rumored, during the day, that certain parties were making a test in councilmen upon the location of the railroad depots. The following is tuce and onions attract the attention of all THE OFFICIAL COUNT:
