The Electric Light.

If high scientific attachments ought to confer a title to respect and attention, the opinion of Sir William Thompson, Professor of Natural Philosophy at the University of Glasgow on the subject of the electric light is worthy of the fullest consideration. The science of lighting by electricity has been so developed that the possibility of its general application is no longer a matter of doubt. It is at once the cheapest, safest and most brilliant illuminating agent that has yet been discovered. Sir William Thompson believes that its general introduction as a means of illumination in every position in which a fixed light is required will certainly take place in the near future. The most improved form of burner that has yet been devised is that constructed by Messrs. Siemens, of Woolwich, and used in their factory. It was this description of lamp that was exhibited by the Professor at Glasgow University and afforded the subject of his lecture. Sir William Thompson believes that it will shortly be adopted as the means of lighting streets, public buildings and the interior of all large rooms where much light is required. The Professor's enthusiasm on the subject may be thought to be exaggerated when he suggests the possibility of lighting an American continent with electricity generated by means of engines worked by the stupendous water power of Niagara. We clip from the London Times the portion of Sir William Thompson's remarks in which he refers to this subject.

He was also of the opinion that a great deal of natural energy which was now lost might be advantageously applied in the future to lighting and manufactures. There was a deal of energy in waterfalls. In the future no doubt, such water as the Falls of Niagara would be extensively used—indeed, he believed the Falls of Niagara would be the future seat of the production of light and mechanical power over a large area of North America. The electricity produced by them might be advantageously conducted for hundreds of miles, and the manufacture of whole towns might be set in motion by it. Powerful copper conductors would have to be used—conductors of a tubular form, with water flowing through them to keep them cool. There would be no danger of the application of the electricity as a motive power. It might do all the work that could be done by steam engines of the most powerful kind.

As to the use of electricity by means of the Falls of Niagara, his idea was to drive dynamic engines by water power in the neighborhood of the falls, and then to have a series of small dynamos, or generators, at the places where illumination or the development of mechanical power was wanted. There would be no danger of terrible effects being brought about accidentally by the use of such terrific power, because the currents employed would be continuous and not alternating.

SIR GARNET WOLSELEY'S AFRICAN EXPLORATIONS.—He has supreme authority. He has the prestige which comes of uniform success—unless his administration of Cyprus must be accounted a failure, where he had innumerable silk purses to make out of proverbially unsuitable material. For the first time, however, he will find himself in command of a considerable force—near 30,000 men of all arms and races. It would hardly help you to estimate his chances of winning glory if dilated on his social qualities; but I may say that he is personally popular, that he has the ability of teaching men to him, that his officers served him zealously and that his only very marked antipathy is to special correspondents in the field. I met him shortly before he went to Cyprus. He is a man of slight frame and middle height, quiet in manner, with something about him that marks in every glance and gesture his life of arms and adventure. The most striking feature of his spare brown face frankly fringed with whisker, in the eyes, which are rather small, but curiously reckless and keen. He is reckoned the most favored soldier in Her Majesty's service. Perhaps no other man, not of royal birth, has had such chances, or risen so rapidly. He is so popular that he has the difficulty of being a man of slight frame and middle height, quiet in manner, with something about him that marks in every glance and gesture his life of arms and adventure.
