Colonel Jack Hays' Men.

The Indiana Register, in February, 1848, published a series of letters from Lieutenant Colonel Ebenezer Dumont.

Well, yes, I was about telling you how the Rangers came to town.

Both young men rose instantly, but as their glances rested upon the young lady they stood still.

His outstretched hand fell listlessly to his side in blank amazement.

Miss Trescott advanced towards the astonished lawyer.

I am pleased to meet you again, Mr. Sword, and thank you for your noble defense of a servant.

His hand closed over hers, and the eloquent look he bent upon her expressed his pleasure more fully than simple words could have done.

There was an angry flush on his face, which boded no good, and Frank Elson, not wishing to provoke the anger and thereby lose the friendship of the young lawyer said laughingly while he knocked the ashes of the end of his cigar.

Well, Dick, since you take this matter so much to heart, I will tell Miss Annie what I think of the matter.

Miss Trescott glided to the young artist's side, and laying her hand on his arm, said softly:

I do not hate you, Mr. Elson, and I'm truly glad to meet you as a friend.

Frank grasped the white-jeweled hand, and a bright, eager look crept into his eyes as he spoke.

I freely forgive you, but all the affection I ever felt for you died a sudden and I never shall be able to love you again.

As she ceased speaking the young lawyer drew near. Bowing low before the girl, he said quickly, while a flush swept over his face:

Miss Trescott, your grandfather surely informed you that the person whom he had done the great honor to choose for the husband of his grand-daughter had declined to accept the honor until he had formed the acquaintance of the young lady, and had won her heart and her free consent to become his wife.

Yes, Mr. Sword, Annie replied, a vivid blush lying on her cheek, and told him very plainly that she would rather starve than marry a man I hated.

I was only just, Miss Trescott; the money was rightfully yours, and I would have been a villain to act otherwise.

When he had done an awkward silence fell between the two, the coloring coming and going in the young girl's cheeks, and Dick's heart beating at a rapid rate.

Frank Elson, after bidding Annie Trescott good-bye, bowed to Dick, and took his departure, a wiser if not a happier man.

which this was said, and the whole bearing and department of Colonel Hays was so sincere, frank and manly, that none could have doubted his own belief that his men had done right.

An Infallible Remedy.

If there is one thing more than another that annoys a good wife, who is nervously sensitive to all that is gross and ill-timed, it is the habit some husbands have of using profane language in their homes.

A lady whose husband was addicted the bad practice we have alluded to, came to her family physician, laid her grievances before him, and said:

"Now Dr. N—, won't you recommend with me, and try to break him of his habit? I know he will listen to you."

"Why, madam," said the doctor he would pay no attention to any thing I could say to him, although somewhat out of my line, I will recommend a prescription to be administered by you that will certainly cure him. It is an infallible remedy."

"Oh, what is it, doctor?"

"Well, when Jones comes home again and swears, do you swear back at him. Of course, I don't want to take the name of the Lord in vain, but, d—n things a little for his benefit."

And she did.

The next day John came in and inquired whether dinner was ready and was told it was not.

"Well, why in the devil isn't it?" he asked.

"Because," she replied, "the wood was so d—d wet the fire wouldn't burn."

"Why, Mary, what is the matter with you? Are you crazy or have you been drinking?"

"Neither," she said, and quietly proceeded to put on the dinner.

But didn't melt like butter between his teeth? neither resisted all efforts at masturbation, like so much India rubber, and finally John blurted out:

"What's this d—d beef so infernal tough?"

Mary looked up archly and replied:

"Well, John, I suppose you went down to the butcher's, and without knowing the difference, picked out a piece of some d—d old stag that hadn't been fed for a month."

John jumped up, looked at his wife in dismay, and wanted to know what such language from her lips meant.

"It means just this, John—you are the head of the family, and just as long as you think it manly to swear in my presence, I intend to do the same. If you don't like to hear it, you know how to prevent it."

The cure was radical, and to this date Mary has never been compelled to administer another dose of Dr. N—'s prescription.

No Need for Coal or Wood.

A correspondent has sent us a startling letter from MM. Betam-Edwards, from which we give an extract: "I send you the following particulars of a recent scientific invention, just patented, and destined without doubt to play a very important part in our economic history. I think it may be regarded as a solution for once and for all of the great coal question, not only among ourselves but abroad."

MM. Bourbennel's invention. The fire could be on the minutes scale or on the largest. They would be used for heating a baby's food or for roasting an ox. Being lighted instantaneously, there will be a great economy of time. M. Bourbennel at once patented his invention and a body of engineers and savants from Paris visited him, and pronounced his discovery one of the most remarkable of his age. I have seen these fires and stoves. There is no mistake about the matter. It is as clear as possible that we have an inexhaustible economic source of fuel. Several hundred years ago the discoverer would have been buried as a wizard."
