Rupture CURED.

From a Merchant. DAYTON, W. T. Feb. 10, 1879.

W. J. Horne, Proprietor California Elastic Truss Co., 702 Market Street, San Francisco—Sir:

I purchased of you about six years ago a pair of your Elastic Trusses, which have cured my rupture, and I have proved a miracle to me. I have been ruptured forty years, and worn dozens of different kinds of Trusses, all of which have ruined my health, and were injurious to my back and spine.

Your valuable Truss is as easy as an old shoe and is worth hundreds of dollars to me, as it affords me so much pleasure. I can and do advise all, both ladies and gentlemen, afflicted with and wear your modern improved Elastic Truss in preference to any other kind, and I am satisfied. I never expect to be cured, but am satisfied and happy with the comfort it gives me to wear it. It was the best $10 I ever invested in. You can refer any one to me, and I will be glad to answer any letters on its merits.

I remain, yours respectfully, D. B. BUNNELL.

Latest Medical Endorsements. MARTINEZ, Cal., Feb. 17, 1879.

W. J. Horne, Proprietor California Elastic Truss Co., 702 Market Street, S. F.—Sir: In reference to your California Elastic Truss, I would say that I have carefully studied its mechanism, applied it in practice and do not hesitate to say that for all purposes for which TRUSSES are worn it is the best Truss ever offered to the public.

Yours truly, J. H. CAROTHERS, M. D. Endorsed by a Prominent Medical Institute.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 6, 1879.

W. J. Horne, Esq.—Sir: You ask my opinion of the relative merits of your Patent Elastic Truss to that of the other kind that have been used under my observation, and in reply I frankly state that from the time my attention was first called to your truss, though highly as I value the other kind, I have never been able to apply to me for aid in their special cases of rupture, and whom I have advised to use yours, and acknowledge their entire satisfaction, and consider them very much favored by the possession of one of the improved Elastic Truss.

Yours truly, BARLOW J. SMITH, M. D. Proprietor Pacific Medical Institute, 635 California Street, San Francisco.

A REMARKABLE CURE. SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 26, 1879.

W. J. Horne, Proprietor California Elastic Truss Co., 702 Market Street, San Francisco—Sir: I am truly grateful to you for the wonderful cure your valuable truss has effected on my little boy. The double truss I purchased from you has PERFECTLY CURED him of his painful rupture on both sides in a little over six months.

The steel truss he had before I bought yours caused him cruel torture, and it was a happy day for us all when he was cured. I often seem so incredulous in the presence of a sudden change—has its share in throwing around Boston literary circles that air of reserve and narrowness generally attributed to them. How much of warmth and cheerfulness, what a display of delightful informality they really inculcate, only a gradual and constant association makes plain.

The affection of English ways and an English tone is another singular and well-contrasted trait of Bostonians, for those who most indulge in them are frequently the quickest to resent English patronage, and to dwell on the great difference between America and England, in favor of our own country. Occasionally, however, the preference for foreign country is aired, as a mark of superiority. The real attitude in which such persons put their selves was once delightfully stated by a competent authority. "Those persons who prefer the London of the day, and, certainly, Emerson say, gently (speaking of a young American author who appeared very full satisfied with his native land), "would much better stay there, for we do not need them." And, certainly, our local Boston's influence has always been intensely patriotic.

In Cambridge life there is a happy mixture of high aims, prosaic details, and agreeable companionships—something that disturbs during these quarters of the year by the muddy streets and sidewalks, wherein people sometimes leave their umbrellas sticking while in the pursuit of social or intellectual pleasure. Pleasant and peaceful as that country town-like city is, there is room for question whether it is not too much shut away from the stir of the great world. Like its highways, it becomes rattled. The very recreation which professors, literary men, studious ladies, and cultivated professional people seek at evening hours is often only a prolongation of the mental exercise involved in their work. The tone of conversation is largely critical. Even scandal may be said here to assume the form of "analysis." How seriously Cambridgeans sometimes take the practical minutiae of life will be guessed when it is whispered that a lady who could not make her house furnish work well attended a course of astutely technical lectures on thermodynamics!

Dancing is a rare diversion, excepting for young girls and undergraduates. A Methodist preacher, who looked on at a small dancing party at a private house in Cambridge, observed with sectarian humor that the young women went through their quadrilles and waltzes as gravely as if they were "under conviction." Clubs of ladies, or ladies and gentlemen together, are numerous; but they are often rather to be described as classes for the study of languages—German, Italian, Russian, or even Arabic; or when not formed for this object, they make essay reading, the study of literature, or amateur acting, their aim. One dramatic company in especial, embracing members from sundry families of the greatest social consequence, has held a brief season each winter, for several years, during which difficult plays are brought out in excellent style, with scenery, mechanism, and even music produced and executed by amateurs. Tickets are sold only to friends of associate members, and the performances are crowded. Strangely enough, attempts to found a club among professors and instructors in the university here always failed, though these gentlemen have their small clubs for the pursuit of specialties in which they are interested. Of anything more than a dilettante interest in literature outside of the college, and, excepting Mr. Longfellow, and such men as John Fluke, or T. W. Higginson, there is very little. Young writers are not welcomed, and the men of established reputation appear indifferent as to whether literary vitality shall continue or cease on this ground, which is generally thought to be consecrated to fruitful thought and imagination. Meanwhile inspiration, breadth of sympathy and aims, and all tendency to express sturdy strong ideas and sentiments of national or general value, are being sacrificed to the desire for specializing culture. Perhaps Harvard thinks its proper duty better fulfilled by educating the average undergraduate mind in accordance with a higher standard than heretofore. But it is a question whether it should encourage actual production instead of mere criticism, and stimulate literary growth outside of the class room.

An Honest Ticket Agent. Don Platt tells this in a recent number of the Washington Capital:

A reformed ticket agent, now engaged in a mercantile pursuit, and who looks back with profound melancholy and remorse to his wicked career, as he sat in a chair, told me that once, in his sinful days, he was employed at Chicago on the through line from that incorporated Boreas on the lake to New York city, which made up of a new combination, "was smoking" against Vanderbilt. "I extend my respects to the combination had at Chicago a corps of able-bodied runners, to seize wayfarers by the throat and fetch them up to the ticket agent, where the innocent traveler was to be talked into a ticket over the combination."

One day an able-bodied ruffian came, leading up a rough-looking customer, who wished to purchase a ticket to New York by the way of Cleveland. The combination did not touch Cleveland. But evidently the old white-headed, loose-troused, coarse-booted countryman, with his white head and goggling look, did not know what he wanted. It was for the ticket agent to care for him, and he was rattled, with ticket in hand, until the venerable, goggle-eyed old nuffe toes had extracted from a fat wallet the price and shambled awkwardly away.

"Say, old fellow," asked a friend who happened to be in the office, "do you know who you sold a ticket to when?"

"Not a bit of it—that was Horace Greeley."

"Gee whilleans! and he wanted to go to Cleveland?"

"He was billed to lecture there, and the Tribune will give your combination the devil for the swindle."

"That's so. Eere, put your cheek to this hole till I find him."

Away ran the ticket agent. It was not difficult to find the hotel at which the venerable philosopher lodged. The ticket agent found him in the reading room, pouring over a stale issue of the Tribune. He tapped Horace on the shoulder, and the philosopher looked up with the child like expression of his that seemed to come out from open eyes and mouth.

"I beg your pardon," said the agent, "but I sold you a ticket to New York a while since, and I made a mistake."

"Some old fool of a corn-cracker," replied Horace, dryly.

"No, sir; in the route. I remembered after you left you said Cleveland. Now the ticket I gave you will not take you to Cleveland."

"The hell it don't!" cried Greeley, starting up.

"Well, young man, I can tell you that would be a great disappointment in Cleveland."

"I don't know anything about that; but I did not want any ticket to New York through any part of mine. So I've been in every hotel in Chicago after you."

"The devil you have."

"I have. There is the right ticket. It's the original bill. But my honor, sir, rises above trick. I bought the right ticket for you, and if you will give me the old one we will be even."

"Young man," said Horace, fishing from his capacious pocket the ticket of the combination, "you are very good to good, come to think of it, too damned good for a ticket agent. Leave that good young man, before your innocent nature is corrupted, or your damned patent-screw pod-anger line is burst up. Go west, young man; go west."

An Absent Minded Man. The Hartford Courant says that a curious demonstration of absent-mindedness occurred at the New York and New England Railroad hearing in that city.

The original dispatch of instruction to Conductor Aldritch, in violating which he met his death, was put into evidence and was passed about the room. One gentleman with whom it lodged, and another gentleman who had forgotten he had ever had it.

Senator Bruce, of Mississippi, says that while in Italy three years ago, he went into a barber's shop at Pisa to have his hair dressed. "You know," says Mr. Bruce, in describing the incident, "that the hair of my peculiar race, color, and previous condition of servitude is very singular; the longer it gets the shorter it grows, and really outkinks every conception of curiosity. There was just enough of the black race dashed in jumping up like a jack in a box. He went out and called in another barber, who stood over my wool, wondering. Finally he got his scissors, clipped it off to suit himself, and carefully wrapped up the fleece for preservation as the greatest curiosity he had ever seen. I could not speak Italian nor he English, so he must wonder to-day what manner of man I am."

USEFUL RECIPES. For a Cough.—For a tight, hoarse cough, where phlegm is not raised, or with difficulty, take hot water often—as hot as can be sipped. This will give immediate and permanent relief. Don't fail to try this remedy because it is simple.

Catarra.—The best way to deal with the disease is not to have it to keep clean, to eat wholesome food, to live in clean, well-ventilated houses, to dress warmly with flannels next the skin, to keep the feet warm and dry. Children sitting with damp shoes on are almost certain to contract catarra.

The evaporation of the moisture produces a constant chilliness which is dangerous even to those in robust health. Children's feet and legs are ordinarily not more than half clothed, and it is little wonder that catarra is so prevalent among them.

The Ear.—Dr. Roosa, in a lecture on the ear, said that no small amount of trouble in the ear was caused by too frequent syringing and boring out with a twisted towel or handkerchief, not to mention hair-pins, bodkins and other metallic instruments. In his opinion, ear smaller than a little finger, although one writer says "a avoidance of many ear troubles was to be secured by asking care not to duck the head in cold water, or to syringe the deeper part without the order of a physician, or introduce any body which can push the wax lower down in the drum.

"No, as I understand it these cold waves come from the vast deserts of snow in the Siberian plains, and radiate thence over the globe, but principally in this direction." "Well, why the dickens don't they stay there?" "Why, 'tis too cold, idiot."

"Culture."

A Cambridge, Mass., correspondent of the New York Tribune makes the recent celebration of the 250th anniversary of the settlement of Boston and Cambridge the text for a critical letter on their literary peculiarities. He says the two places are pretty much alike, though with some minor differences, and continues:
