

UNHAPPY IRELAND.

The situation in Ireland runs from bad to worse with rapid strides. In fact, a state of war actually exists in many districts; and though the country has not yet been put under martial law, it is easy to see that this is what the end must be unless the British Ministry put a sudden stop to evictions, which they will hardly do to do, as that would surely result in the defeat of Mr. Gladstone's Land bill and in the disruption of his party in the Commons. Like all compromises of a chronic evil this measure fails to satisfy extremists on either side. Conservatives are bitterly denouncing it as conceding too much against the landed interest, while the Irish party insist with still more vehemence that it does not concede enough. The middle party, but forced by both extremes, are sorely puzzled to know what to do, and as is common under like conditions, take but half-hearted measures. The constabulary forces are tied hand and foot, and in that state sent out to quell mobs, who hoot, scoff, and pelt them with stones. Of course, nobody cares to hold the office of constable on such dangerous terms, and the constabulary are suddenly taken with a resigning temper. No wonder, after four hundred of them have been seriously disabled by wounds, which they had not the power to resist or prevent any other way than by resigning. Every resignation of a constable, every successful stoning of a constabulary force, emboldens the mob and leads one step nearer to a general rising and to open war against the hated English landlords. It is easier to restrain civil officers than military. So far the military have borne all the insults put upon them by the rioters, but not always patiently. The fifty marines who were stoned by the mob the other day and forced to retreat must have felt strongly provoked to open fire, and when they are re-enforced and sent back they will be in no mood for another retreat. If the rioters murder a constable or a process server, they are safe from punishment, for no Irish jury will convict. If the constable kills a rioter he is thenceforth a "marked man," and his life as good as lost. The continuance of this state of affairs for any length of time is impossible. It points inevitably to a declaration of martial law. The situation is rapidly assuming the form which the slavery question took in this country in 1850-61. It admits of no half-way measures or compromise. It appeals to force, and force alone, we fear, will have to solve it, in spite of Archbishop Croke's earnest invocations for a peaceful and non-resisting solution.

One of the cantons of Switzerland has passed a law forbidding children less than fifteen years old from smoking cigars or tobacco either at home or in the streets. It has been found that evils have sprung from the practice, little boys even suffering from paralysis as the result. How deplorably common the practice of smoking among small boys and young men has become since cheap cigarettes have come into fashion. In the editorial columns of a daily paper in another city we saw the physical evils of the striking sentence: "In addition to the ruinous influence which so strong poison as nicotine must have upon young physiques, even when taken in the smallest quantities and in the mildest form, there is the fact that it frequently leads to a state of nervousness and depression, from which the sufferer naturally seeks relief in alcoholic stimulants." Every parent should, by example and precept, try to prevent his boys from learning to smoke.

A Los Angeles paper is demanding that Gov. Herkins shall call the California legislature together, and keep it together till an apportionment bill is passed. That would just suit most of the members. The oftener he calls them up to the public feeding trough the better they will be pleased.

The report from Salem that warrants are being drawn for construction of the asylum in excess of the appropriations, is unfounded. The expenditure will be kept strictly within the appropriation. So there is no opportunity for political gash from that source.

YAGUINA BAY AND THE RAILROAD.
 Ever since the Oregon Pacific railroad assumed the appearance of success, it has been assailed, denounced and opposed with extreme bitterness and unfairness, commencing with Hon. Sol. Hiro's statement in the Oregon Senate chamber that its prospects was a fraud, and closely followed by the miserably tissue of lies submitted by examiner. The high office Secretary of the Interior was prostituted, and Hon. Carl Schurz, under the influence of capital freely expended to deprive the people of the Willamette Valley of competition, was induced to disregard both record and precedent of his office, and open a question for no other purpose than to disturb the title of certain lands, the basis of the Oregon Pacific. The price paid for this despisable piece of business was the editorial chair of the N. Y. Post, recently purchased by Mr. Villard. Gradually but surely every opposing line has fallen into the hands of the mighty, grasping corporation. Some of the leading newspapers, claiming to be the friend of the people, have drifted into the current of monopolistic favor, and seem ready to drop the higher duty of journalism and bend pliant knees to the great success.

The interests heretofore prompting opposition, have multiplied and become intensified with each acquisition of property, and we may expect no favors in the future, if we had any in the past. H. W. Sukedoff, late superintendent of census, speaks his mind with candid honesty, and reflects the opinion of nine-tenths of the citizens of Portland. He says:
 So far then, the equal accessibility from the ocean, to superior facilities of communication with the interior and the advantage in having a good start, point unmistakably to Portland as the great metropolis of the future. The sooner this is admitted, the sooner all the bickering and burling at her progress is ceased, the better it will be for the whole community. With the exception of a few holders of town lots in aspirant cities, the great bulk of our people have no particular interest in the prosperity of this or that place, but all are deeply interested that the trade in commodities should flow smoothly and with as little friction as possible. The common interest of every merchant, tradesman, farmer and stock-raiser in the valleys of the Columbia and Willamette demands that the obstructions in the channel that conducts his goods to and from him should be removed. Every obstruction lowers the price of the producer's goods and enhances the cost of the same to the consumer.

To open well our channels of commerce it were well to set aside political clap-trap and intrigue, and proceed to work systematically. Small annual appropriations can only be expected at present. Whether there shall be frittered away here and there for the purpose of catching a few votes, or be judiciously applied where it will do the most good to the greatest number, depends much on the intelligence, honesty and determination of our citizens. Stripped of all personal and political interests that cloud such questions, it becomes clear that the work of greatest importance to nine-tenths of our people is the thorough opening of the lower river and the necessary improvement at the bar. Let our members of congress concentrate their efforts on this point, and let our legislators enact suitable laws in regard to pilotage and towage, and the whole community will be benefited. The interest of Portland as the commercial center is closely identified with that of the interior, and it is absurd, or worse, to try to antagonize the two.

The independence of such language leaves no hope. Suggestions of this kind are only made by those who feel certain of their power to override the will of the people. After this no man having either "intelligence or honesty" will dare urge on congress a claim for harbor improvement that will in any way affect the improvement of the lower Columbia from Portland to the sea. Coquille, Coosue and Yaguina Bays should ask for nothing, and so far as the influence of the opposition is concerned, it will be used to prevent any further favorable legislation. No man can view the situation without alarm, as the state is now in the condition of many other states that in times past we pitied, the transportation controlled by one company, the one thing of all others on which the prosperity of a country depends, manipulated to enrich at the expense of the public. Legislation cannot reach this question in Oregon, without sincerely an effort on the part of the railroad companies the last legislature refused to entertain a bill, now of the greatest consequence to the state. Fairly warned the monopoly will see to it that no man, republican or democrat goes to the legislature with their interests. Oregon will not be an exception to the general rule elsewhere under similar conditions. The late Col. Tom Scott so completely owned the Pennsylvania legislature for years that a member once moved that if "Scott had no more business before that body that they adjourn." We will live to see Oregon handled with the same tenor and systematic regard for wealth invested in railroads and steamers. Some will say "what are you going to do about it?" answer nothing. Everything that could be done has been done to avert this disaster, and no fault can be found with those who have acted for the Oregon Pacific. They have spent time and money, and struggled against heavy odds, while a company like the Northern Pacific succumbs, and a company like the "limited Scotch" (I guess we all understand what "limited" means), take the contribution of the farmers, made to establish competition and cheaper rates, and leases the whole at a good rate of interest for 99 years, surrendering the object sought for to the enemy. I cannot in justice condemn those who have acted so entirely different and considerate.

REALTY.
 Since the above was written it is stated on good authority that Carl Schurz was one of the men who rided Mr. Billings to desert his firm and sell out to Mr. Villard. Evidence accumulates that Schurz was the willing tool, in office and out, of the O. R. & N. Co.

EDITORS GAZETTE.—I ask the favor once more through your paper to answer a piece signed Lee Henkle. In the Gazette of June 10th Baalam's mule has brayed again, this time he signs his name Lee Henkle, and now I will ask the pardon of the public for noticing this man, for you that know him know what kind of a head and cheek he has. He has been galled into signing his name to that piece in the paper and is more to be pitied than blamed. He says he wants this controversy to stop, O, yes, that stop thief is an old adage, Lee, hereafter before you stick your name to a thing, know what it contains, you can take my first answer to Tax-payer and chew that; I don't go back on anything that I have said, so call your witnesses and prove up, or keep your claims closed and your nose out of my business, for I don't think that I will notice you or your confederate again, and after I have made my returns, that the public has a right to criticize me as a public officer, and if any grievances, there is a board of Equalization that those wrongs, if any, can be righted without such squish heads as Lee Henkle, with more cheek than brains, braying about how people have been assessed. Now I will drop him to attend to his office of Supervisor, and as he is a standing candidate for Constable it would be well for him to look after that office while old British is on the reservation. E. SKIPTON.

What will the caricaturists now do to make General Butler's familiar features appear odious in the pictorial papers? The New York Star says that he recently paid an oculist $1,000 to cut the cords that drew his eye ball toward his nose, thus giving his eye that oblique cast that has for many years been familiar to the public. Butler without his squint would be another man, and afford a fresh subject for the artist. It is as if he had lost individuality, and we are not sure that we shall love the fascinating widow quite so ardently now that his features have become too dreadfully symmetrical, you know.

The governor general of Canada draws $50,000 annually, the same salary that the president of the United States is entitled to. But the Canadian official has not one-tenth of the population or wealth to draw upon that our president has. And the services of the former are not important. It is the fifth wheel to a very small coach.

THE LINN COUNTY MYSTERY.—Just as we were going to press we learn that W. W. Francis, the man who was reported murdered at Kendall's bridge, in Linn county, came into Lebanon, last Tuesday from the Cascade mountains in a starving and half-mad condition. He says that he was actually attacked at the place mentioned and knocked senseless, and when he regained consciousness was in a cabin in the mountains with a man who could not tell him his way out or how he came there. The whole thing is still a mystery. Mr. W. is now with his family at Halsey in a semi-insane condition.

A CARD OF THANKS.—I desire thus publicly to express my thanks to the ladies who so kindly furnished their potted flowers and canaries for the decoration of the M. E. Church on "Children's Day." Besides the members of our own congregation who furnished flowers, I would name Mrs. H. and Mrs. K., whose flowers were choice; and Mrs. D. Bayley, who lives in a garden of flowers excelled by none that I have seen this side of Portland. I also thank Mrs. Vincent for the use of her organ on the occasion. S. A. STARR, Pastor.
