OFFICIAL PAPER FOR BENTON COUNTY

TEACHERS AND SCHOOLS.

The common School System is one which has come to us in its present condition through many years of experience and many changes have been introduced from time to time, so that the result attained in its practical workings would produce the effect intended.

The object in introducing this system was to afford the rising generation throughout the whole length and breadth of this beautiful and rapidly growing country a sure and ready means by which they might gain a knowledge of those branches of education necessary to qualify them intellectually and morally to properly exercise the various rights, duties and privileges of citizens of this free, republican form of government. That such was the object, there is no doubt.

And it is just as essential that their moral training be equally as good, pure and thorough, as it is that they be instructed in those branches taught in the books commonly used in such schools. In fact the moral training is more essential to be guarded than the others, for generally the moral qualities control the person, so that if their ideas of morality are low, cultivation in other respects many times qualifies them, so that it enables them to degenerate into immorality to a greater extent than they otherwise could.

The history of other nations which have prospered and fell, furnish us with ample proof that the morals of the people degenerated before the nation's downfall.

If a good, substantial education is indispensable to the citizens of a republican form of government, the moral training of the young should be the greatest and best of reasons to be guarded with the utmost care. It is difficult to tell at what period in the life of the child it is when they form fixed ideas of morality, justice and decency. But it is very evident that the training from which they form such principles, commences as soon as they are born, and is large enough to abandon the cradle, and long before they are of sufficient age to attend the common school. Those principles are formed from the training received and from their observations of others from early infancy to years of maturity.

If such be the case, then their training should be thoroughly and jealously guarded, not only while they are directly under the parental roof, but also when at school. When they are at home the parents can perform this duty, but while they are at school the teacher must and can only look after and guard these important interests.

Then it must inevitably follow that on teachers should be sought after or employed except those who are thoroughly familiar with the several branches of common school education, and who also have just as thorough and correct perceptions of justice and morality, and whose character in the scale of morality is firmly established, and who practice accordingly in all actions through life, for a person cannot more successfully teach a standard of morality higher than he is possessed himself, than he can any thing else of which he is not familiar.

If a person in this country who desires to teach a district school produces the usual certificate of examination upon the several branches usually taught, it is generally deemed sufficient by patrons and directors of schools to authorize them to secure their services. But we confidently think that a much higher and more important duty rests upon them to look further and examine into more important qualifications than are usually exhibited by means of such certificate.

Senator Lafayette Grover is on his way home from Washington. At the end of his official term we presume he will return to Oregon to remain permanently, or else we mistake the good sense of the people of Oregon. Plaindealer.

Great Britain has 75,000,000 of Mussulman subjects, and is next to Turkey, the largest Mussulman power in the world.

THE DEADLOCK.

About six weeks ago when Mr. Conkling sent in his resignation from the high office of United States Senator, little did he think there would be any hesitancy on the part of the New York Legislature in returning him. So confident was he of it, that about the time his resignation was accepted he indirectly intimated to some of the anxious inquirers at that time that he did not wish to be sent back. And after he returned to New York, he first appeared very indifferent about a re-election. But he soon found that difficulty was ahead and became indignant because republicans would not all join in a party caucus. It soon was apparent to the whole country that he was deeply interested in and anxiously desiring to be re-elected. He soon began actively to interview different members of the legislature on the subject and as Senator Madden said "he did not mean to say that Conkling, was twisting the buttons of men's coats," when accused of button holding them, but that he was there helping to vindicate his resignation. If Mr. Conkling after resigning had gone and not have troubled himself about the future action of the New York legislature, the people would probably have regarded him as a consistent man and honest in his purpose; although they might have doubted the wisdom of his acts, but the moment that he commenced to try to influence the action of the legislature in his own favor for relations it stamped his whole course as a contemptible farce and unworthy of the high position to which he had been exalted. He has no doubt learned long before this time that "the way of the transgressor is hard," for it has been evident to almost every one since the struggle began that he had but little chance of being returned. He probably wishes that "he had not done it." But at this late day he cannot retrace his steps or make amends for what he has done. His resignation and that of Mr. Platt has left the Democratic party in the United States Senate in the majority and it must continue thus unless New York sends republicans to fill their places which they will likely do but they will not be Conkling and Platt. The republican party can not afford, under any circumstances, to return men who have been recreant to their trust when occupying such important positions, and at such a critical time.

The Republican State Committee of North Carolina have agreed to oppose the Prohibition law passed by a Democratic Legislature for submission to a vote of the people on the first Thursday in August. As a political move, the resolution is a shrewd one, and may result in gaining enough votes to secure a popular majority in 1882.

There are thousands of owners of apple and peach orchards and vineyards in North Carolina whose interests would be injuriously affected by a bill prohibiting all forms of spirituous distillation, and whose votes will undoubtedly be given to the party which opposes such legislation.

All interested in the liquor traffic, either as producers or sellers, will subscribe liberally to the campaign against the law, and the Republican committee will doubtless be able to point to surprising gains at the polls as a vindication of their action. On the other hand, the passage of a prohibition law by Democrats sufficient evidence of how grievous is the curse of the liquor traffic in North Carolina, and the negro voters who will rally to its support are precisely those who are most demoralized by the low groggeries which exist in such profusion throughout the State. While fully recognizing the fact that prohibition is a species of social reform which begins at the wrong end, it is not calculated to reassure those who believe in the perpetuity of existing party lines to find Southern Republican driven to adopt the role of Northern Democrats by mustering the forces of ignorance and self-interest against well-meaning, though wrong-headed, reformers.—N. Y. Times.

What connection there is between blowing up public buildings and redressing the wrongs of Ireland only Irishmen can explain. Even to onlookers who sympathize with the objects of Irish agitation such an attempt as that made to destroy the Liverpool Town Hall must seem to be a piece of pure ruffianism, as cowardly as it is purposeless. The two miscreants who were arrested as being concerned in the attempt are said to have recently returned from this country, and to have been abundantly supplied with money. If their work be another sample of the uses to which the Fenian "skirmishing fund" is applied, it is evident that it would be better for Ireland were this money thrown into the sea. For, her most implacable foes could wish for no better arguments with which to assail the character of her sons than acts which are worthy only of a tribe of bloodthirsty savages. Whether in the British Parliament or in the forum of nations, the advocates of justice to Ireland will be heavily handicapped by having her cause identified with deeds of such reckless atrocity as the blowing up of prisons, station-houses, and justly valued public edifices, with all the possibilities which these attempts involve of sacrificing the lives of people entirely innocent of any wrong to the country which is supposed to be helped by this species of warfare.—N. Y. Times.

Editors GAZETTE.—By your permission I desire once more to reply to a scurrilous article published in a recent number of the GAZETTE over the signature of E. Skipton, County Assessor. When Mr. Skipton was elected to that responsible position, the people thought the assessing would be done properly, but it appears from what has already gone before they will be sadly disappointed. I have been repeatedly informed that the assessing in King's Valley has been even worse than in Muddy, or the upper portion of the county. It is now apparent the assessor don't know the valuation of property and has not judgement enough to assess the county. The people would not have known how their property had been assessed had I not called their attention to it through the press. It is not right to wait until the whole county is assessed before these blunders and bad assessing are corrected. When the day reckoning comes just think of the people of the entire county coming in to have their assessments corrected. This would be appalling to the busy farmer, such a thing was never known in the history of the world. As the assessor has not denied any of the statements made in my last article, it must be taken for granted they were all true. Should he deny any of them, then the names can be brought forth to substantiate them. I do not consider this meddling with other people's business, but with matters that affect the public and our own pockets. Mr. Skipton has been a chronic fence-sucker for years and a standing candidate for any thing he can get. The next thing, he will expect the people to boost him into Congress. He is a good farmer where he has been able for the last twenty years by his superior skill to raise at least six bushels of grain per acre. LEE HENKLE, June 27th 1881.

INGERSOL ON NAPOLEON.

A little while ago I stood by the grave of the old Napoleon—a magnificent tomb of gilt and gold, fit almost for a dead deity—and gazed upon the sarcophagus of black Egyptian marble, where rest at last the ashes of the restless man. I leaned over the balustrade and thought about the career of the greatest soldier of the modern world. I saw him walking upon the banks of the Seine, contemplating suicide. I saw him at Toulon—I saw him putting down the mob in the streets of Paris—I saw him at the head of the army of Italy—I saw him crossing the bridge of Lodi with the tri-color in his hand—I saw him in Egypt in the shadow of the pyramids—I saw him conquer the Alps and mingle the eagles of France with the eagles of the crag. I saw him at Marengo—at Ulm and Austerlitz. I saw him in Russia, where the infantry of the snow and the cavalry of the wild blast scattered his legions like windrows of withered leaves. I saw him at Leipzig, in defeat and disaster—driven by a million bayonets back upon Paris—clutched like a wild beast—I saw him escape and retake an empire by the force of his genius. I saw him upon the fruitful field of Waterloo, where chance and fate combined to wreck the fortunes of his former king. I saw him at St. Helena, with his hands crossed behind him, gazing out upon the sad and solemn sea.

I thought of the orphans and widows he had made—of the tears that had been shed for his glory, and of the only woman that ever loved him in the land of ambition. And I said I would rather be a French peasant and wear wooden shoes. I would rather have lived in a hut with a vine growing over the door, and the grapes growing purple in the autumn sun. I would rather be that poor peasant with my loving wife by my side, knitting as the day died out of the sky—with my children upon my knees and their arms about me. I would rather have been that man and gone down to the tongueless silence of the dreamless dust, than to have been that imperial personation of force and murder known as Napoleon the Great.

BEAUTIFUL TRIBUTES TO WOMEN: We have seen many beautiful tributes to lovely women, but the following is the finest we have ever read: Place her among flowers, foster her as a tender plant, and she is a thing of fancy, waywardness and folly—annoyed by a dewdrop, fretted by the touch of a butterfly's wing, ready to faint at the sound of a beetle or the rattling of a window pane at night, and she is overpowered by the perfume of the rosebud. But when the real calamity comes, rouse her affections, enkindle the fire of her heart, and mark her then! Place her in the heat of the battle, give her a child, a bird, or anything to protect—and see her in a relative instance, lifting her white arms as a shield, as her own blood crimson her upturned forehead, praying for her life to protect the helpless. Transplant her in the dark places of the earth, call forth her energies to action; and her breath becomes a healing balm, and her presence a blessing. She disputes inch by inch the strides of a stalking pestilence, when man, the strong and brave, pale and affrighted, shrinks away. Misfortunes daunt her not, she wears a life of silent endurance, and goes forward with less timidity than to her bridal. In short, woman is a miracle, a mystery, the centre from which radiates the charm of existence.

Young man, don't swear! Swearing never was good for a sore finger. It never cured the rheumatism nor helped draw a pimple in a lottery. It isn't recommended for liver complaint. It isn't sure against lightning, sewing-machine agents, nor any of the ills of life. There is no occasion for swearing outside of a newspaper office, where it is useful in proof reading and indispensably necessary in getting forms to press. It has been known to also materially assist the editor in looking over the paper after it is printed. But otherwise it is a very wicked habit.—Ex.
